

Summit called

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter will meet with the leaders of six other major industrial nations in London May 7-8, the White House announced today.

Leaders of Canada, West Germany, France, Italy, Japan, and Great Britain will also attend, it is expected.

While House Press Secretary Jody Powell said the summit would not be limited to economic matters, Powell also said it was "possible" that Carter would remain in Europe to attend a NATO meeting after the summit.

He also believed Carter would meet with Syrian President Hafez el-Assad, possibly in Switzerland.

The summit will take Carter on his first trip abroad since he was elected and will bring him together with French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, British Prime Minister James Callaghan and Italian Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti.

The aim of the meeting, which will be only the third summit to be held, is to enable the leaders of the world's major industrialized nations to discuss in depth economic, political, and security issues.

Jody Powell said.

Teton rebuilding favored

By SHANE O'NEILL

IDAHO FALLS — Some 250 waterusers from Eastern Idaho through Magic Valley voted Monday to support reconstruction of the Teton Dam which failed last June 5, flooding a major portion of the Upper Snake River Valley.

The resolution passed at the annual meeting of Watermaster District No. 1 in Idaho Falls without discussion, according to Arthur Larson, watermaster.

He said he believed the irrigators support the reconstruction of the dam "particularly because of the critical drought" this year and the "definite need" for storage water.

The resolution is not specific as to whether the existing dam should be repaired or a new structure begun. Larson said two-thirds of the earthfill is still there as well as the tunnels.

The resolution urges reconstruction of the Teton Dam as "soon as possible after new design plans are drawn to ensure the safe and suitable reconstruction of the dam."

"We would sure like to have that storage water sitting there (in the now free-flowing Teton River) now," Larson said. The Teton Dam had an estimated capacity of 300,000 acre feet of water. It was just nearing completion when it broke last June.

Asked about the safety of the earth-filled dams, Larson said many successful dams in Idaho are in this category. They include Pallsides, Lucky Peak and Anderson Ranch reservoirs in the Boise area.

Commenting on the criticism about earth-filled dams following the Teton disaster, Larson said, "If all these experts had come forth with their ideas before the break it would never have happened."

But he agreed the resolution passed by irrigators Monday "could mean a whole raft of things." It makes no mention of what type the "reconstructed" dam should be.

The Watermaster District No. 1 has endorsed the idea of a Teton Dam for many years. Larson said.

In past years the Teton River had flooded "every five or six years," according to Bill Watts, representative from the Twin Falls Canal Co.

Irrigators also voted support for continued efforts on the Salmon Falls Diversion Project south of Twin Falls.

Studies are now being made on well fields for pumping water into the Snake Plain Aquifer to be taken out for Salmon Falls.

One well under consideration would be above Idaho Falls on the North Fork of the Snake River; another being studied would be near the Milner Pool.

TF hikes water rate 25%

By BOB ZUCKERMAN

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council Monday night approved a water rate increase of roughly 25 per cent, raising the household's annual water bill $15.

The council voted 5-1 in favor of the increase after Councilman Christopher Talkington, who voted no, told other councilmen, "I think we're making a big mistake."

Talkington proposed a 15 per cent increase instead, but the proposal was not considered.

Michael Talley, Twin Falls, supported Talkington, saying his salary hasn't risen enough in the last 12 years to cover the increase in his water bill.

Acting Mayor Henry Woodall argued the increase was necessary because no rate increase had been passed during the last 12 years. The water department can no longer bring in enough revenues to cover costs, he said.

Councilman Leon Smith told the audience, "It's always a good idea for sewage, solid waste and water departments to support themselves."

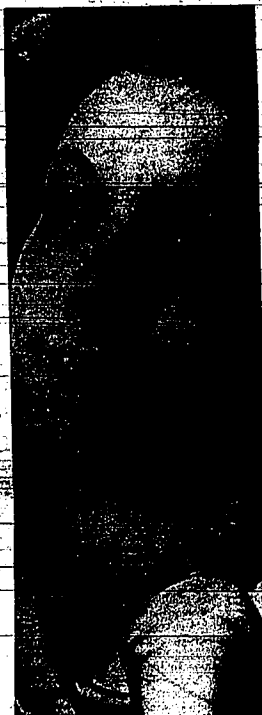

If water costs are not paid for by water revenues, then the council has to raise property taxes to acquire the funding, he said. "You're gonna get it one way or another," he told Talley.

City Manager Jean Miller said this morning the rate increase will be in effect by April 1. New rates are: $3.50 for 4,000 gallons or less per month; then 40 cents for each additional gallon up to 25,000; then 30 cents for each additional gallon up to 50,000; then 17 1/2 cents for each additional gallon up to 100,000; then 10 cents for each additional gallon up to 250,000, and finally 8 1/2 cents for each gallon after that.

Bank forecloses on Ida Gem co-op

By KEN HODGE

Times-News writer

JEROME — More than $500,000 in milk payments to area dairymen has not been paid while a bank is foreclosing on financially troubled Ida Gem Dairymen, company officials say.

Moreover, the farmers won't be paid until the foreclosure procedures are completed, according to Ida Gem Board Chairman Calvin Graybeal.

The Spokane Bank for Cooperatives Monday filed a foreclosure suit in Fifth District Court against Ida Gem, claiming a sum of money is owed the bank.

The amount milk producers alone are owed for their February milk checks, without counting other unsecured creditors, totals more than $500,000, according to Ida Gem director Joe Studer, Rupert.

"They're in a transition period," chairman

Graybeal said about the cooperative. "They are going into receivership today."

Frank Rettig, attorney for Ida Gem, said he would meet today with attorneys representing the Spokane bank to discuss completion of the foreclosure.

"I anticipate that a receiver will be appointed," he said. "He will be charged with protecting the assets for the mortgage and the unsecured creditors."

When asked to estimate the total outstanding debt of the creamery, Rettig said, "I can't tell you there are many who have sold supplies and products who have delivered milk."

Rettig said as of the present time there is no bankruptcy involved with the proceedings.

He said liquidation of the company's assets could mean the milk producers may get payment for their production after the property and equipment at the Jerome creamery are sold.

In the interim according to board member Studer, Dairymen's Creamery in Caldwell has offered to make interest-free advances to local producers hit by the foreclosure to compensate them for their February losses in return for signing a three-year contract for milk delivery to the creamery.

"It's really a loan without any interest," Studer said.

He said the receivership status would give the cooperative time to liquidate its assets and pay off its debts. Then the producers who have been shorted can be repaid.

Dwight Ferrell, milk producer southwest of Jerome, said he was one of the producers who did not receive his milk check for February.

"We all got a letter saying they were broke and wouldn't be able to pay any of the farmers for their milk in February," Ferrell said.

He said he personally lost $4,000 and said he knew others who had been shorted $22,000 and more.

"It's going to hurt for a while," Ferrell said. "I changed companies and went back to Kraft. I won't get a milk check until March 25."

In addition to payment for February production, producers who have been with the cooperative for a while also have dim prospects of receiving payment for their retained money withheld from their milk payments over a period of years.

Graybeal said notices have been sent to producers to enable them to declare the delayed payments as losses on their income tax returns this year.

Winifred producer Leonard Hepworth, who failed to receive $6,000 as payment for his February production, said he will lose "close to $10,000 total" when he figures in approximately $3,200 due him in retains.

"That's the profit for a whole year from my dairy herd," Hepworth said about the $10,000 loss.

Lie tests pushed on welfare moms

By BILL LAZARUS

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Under threat of losing welfare payments and medical benefits, welfare mothers in Idaho are pressured to take lie detector tests to identify the fathers of their children.

If the mothers refuse to take the tests or otherwise refuse to help identify and locate the fathers, they lose their own share of the welfare payment, according to Naomi Brown, financial services manager for the Department of Health and Welfare for this area.

Any child support payments made by the fathers go to the state to help defray costs of the welfare system.

Lie detector tests, Brown said, are given to ensure the state is on solid ground before it takes a man to court to prove that he is the father of a child on welfare.

Lou Garbrecht, a Twin Falls attorney for Idaho Legal Aid Services, maintains that administering the lie detector tests is unnecessary and wrong.

"We think it's an invasion of privacy," he told the Times-News Monday.

The tests, he said, could not be used in a court of law as evidence of paternity. He said there are better "blood and gene tests which now can conclusively prove paternity."

"They don't even verify if a father is in, an area before they force a lie detector test," Garbrecht said.

He said the accused fathers should take the tests if they agree to it. If both the state and the fathers agreed to the tests, Garbrecht said, they could be used as admissible evidence in court.

"Nobody else is forced to take this test. They're picking out this one class of people," he said, maintaining that giving the test to just welfare mothers violates the 14th Amendment which provides for equal protection under the law.

Garbrecht said legal aid presently has no plans to challenge the Health and Welfare policy in court. He said welfare policies are being reviewed on the national and state level, and Legal Aid plans to see if changes are made before making a court issue out of the matter.

The main intent of the program is to provide for children. It's Aid to Dependent Children, not Aid to Dependent Mothers, Brown said.

Establishing the paternity of the father, Brown said, is important to the child for many reasons, including inheritance and just the child's "knowing who the father is."

Even if the mother's benefits were cut off, she said, the children would receive the welfare aid. A mother's benefits amount to about $50 a month plus Medicaid, she said.

She said that if a woman agrees to take the detector test and it doesn't support her statements, it will not be cut off.

Garbrecht, however, maintained that if the lie detector test, does not verify the mother's statements, Health and Welfare officials might "interpret this to mean the mother is not fully cooperating. He said it might be a factor among others in causing the mother's aid to be cut off."

Tom Baird, an assistant attorney general in Twin Falls who helps handle paternity cases, said welfare mothers are not "required" to take the tests.

He said they are asked to take them. But, he said, federal and state regulations do require the mothers to fully cooperate in identifying the fathers. He said if the mothers refuse to take the tests, it might be construed as less than full cooperation.

Baird estimated that in the past 8 months about 30 women have taken the tests and two have refused.

Baird said the women who refuse to take the test would not necessarily be cut off welfare if they had a good reason for their refusal.

Motel asks to keep sign

TWIN FALLS — An attorney representing the Rogerson Motel asked the City Council Monday night to extend the time limit for the motel to take down a sign.

The sign at the motel's rear, apparently still, violates the city's sign ordinance which goes into effect March 20. The ordinance calls for the removal of signs that extend perpendicularly from any building in the downtown area more than 18 inches.

The attorney, Robert Stephan, Twin Falls, argued the motel's sign was a "special case." Unlike most downtown merchants who lease their signs, the Rogerson owns its sign, he said.

Bought for $3,300 before the city passed the sign ordinance five years ago, the sign could not be re-used by the motel as leased signs can be re-used by sign-leasing companies, he said.

To deprive the motel of its sign is to deprive the hotel of a property right without due process of law," the attorney argued.

Stephan estimated the Rogerson sign would have an economic life of at least 10 to 20 more years, and he asked the council to allow Rogerson officials at least 10 years to remove it.

Councilman Stephen Lincoln

sign, he said.

Councilman Stephen Lincoln

said the council would consider the request prior to the next council meeting in two weeks.

In a related matter, City Atty. Charles Brumback announced he would meet at 11 a.m. Thursday in City Hall with an attorney representing a large sign company that leases signs, to more than 20 businesses in Twin Falls.

The council passed the sign ordinance five years ago, but gave downtown merchants until this time to comply with it.

Two months ago, local pharmacist Robert Crowley, Crowley Drugs owner, said he would not take down the sign in front of his store, 144 Main Ave. "When you get laws that want to take away your individual freedom, I feel like it's not constitutional," he said then.

However, later City Manager Jean Miller said Crowley told him the sign would be removed. Crowley has refused to comment on Miller's statement. The sign remains.

Plan meet Friday

TWIN FALLS — Carmen Truscott, spokesman for the Twin Falls County Property Owners' Association, today announced a meeting Friday in the Redwood Inn, Boise, to complete a statewide organization to promote voluntary county planning.

She said the time of the state meeting will be announced. Representatives from northern Idaho, Boise and Twin Falls areas are expected to attend.

The Twin Falls County group is attempting to implement a county plan now in force in Houston, Tex. According to Truscott, the Houston plan is based on protective covenants which the association supports as a natural development of agricultural, residential and commercial zones.

She said the Twin Falls County Property Owners' Association has been criticized as being antiplanning, but "we do favor planning, but not the Twin Falls County Comprehensive Plan."

"The Twin Falls County Comprehensive Plan is not a plan, but a long list of restrictions," Truscott said.

Head tax repealer key bill

BOISE (UPI) — Legislative expenditure to operate Idaho's state government in Fiscal Year 1978 is ending up in "pretty fair shape," a co-chairman of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee said today.

Sen. Richard High, R-Twin Falls, said there were still "a lot of ifs" before the final budget figure was set.

He said there were still bills pending in the legislature which could have a final bearing on the total expenditure by the legislature for fiscal 1978. He said, however, it should be in the neighborhood of the $281 million revenue for state expenditure anticipated by a special revenue projection committee.

"We're in pretty fair shape," High said, adding there was enough money to take care of the fiscal impact of legislation adopted by this session.

The $281 million would include $3.3 million in tax relief through a one-year repeal of the state head tax or filing fee on each income tax return submitted. It has been approved by the House but still must pass the House.

High said if the House refuses to accept the head tax repealer, the joint committee will have to reconvene to see where the money will be spent.

"It probably will go to the Permanent Building Fund or somewhere in the education block, which always needs more money," High said.

Monday, both houses took up big debate calendars and attempted to cut into the heavy load of legislation but, despite the headway, it appears doubtful if the legislature can adjourn by Saturday.

Meanwhile, the House rejected arguments that poor assessment practices created the problems and completed legislative action 45-24 Monday on a bill to set up a school district building account.

Floor sponsor John Sessions, R-Driggs, said other legislation coming later would provide means of financing the account to help impacted districts with exhausted bonding capacity construct necessary classrooms. He said parimutuel funds, liquor surplus, the water-pollution control fund and general fund surplus are possible sources of money.

Sessions said the bill is aimed primarily at five districts: Meridian, Kuna, East Bonneville, Middleton and Post Falls — all of which have experienced excessive growth. Arguments that "goon squads" were conducting state building inspections failed to sway the Idaho Senate and it approved 20-14 a bill to change the State Building Code Board from an advisory to a governing board.

The bill now goes to the House. Earlier in the day, the Senate voted 18-16 on a bill which would allow the right of inspectors to enter premises to inspect mobile home construction.

Idaho

Oral driver exam OK'd

BOISE (UPI) — By a narrow 35-34 vote, the House approved Monday a Senate bill requiring either a written or oral examination for a driver's license.

This marked the third House vote on the bill. Saturday, the House killed the measure 30-34; then revised it 42-21. The bill goes now to the governor.

Floor sponsor Rusty Barlow, R-Pocatello, said the bill allows an oral examination at the discretion of the examiner. Sheriffs and deputies are not giving examinations at present, he said, because they are not required by law.

Rep. Herb Fitz, R-New Meadows, said the bill was not simple enough. He objected because it did not specify that the only persons who should receive oral examinations are those who cannot read or those who have trouble with the English language.

But Rep. Wendell Miller, D-Idaho Falls, said it would be difficult to write into the law all of the special cases where oral examinations could or should be administered.

Death penalty in line

BOISE (UPI) — The House gave final legislative approval 60-10 Monday to a Senate bill bringing Idaho's death penalty into conformance with U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

Rep. Wendy Ungrich, R-Boise, explained the bill briefly to the House. There was no debate. The bill goes now to the governor.

Aid offered crime victims

BOISE (UPI) — The House approved 56-14 and sent to the Senate Monday a bill to provide a way of compensating and assisting innocent victims of criminal acts.

The bill includes a $50,000 appropriation to compensate those who are victimized by criminals or through their attempt to prevent a criminal act suffer bodily injury or death.

Rep. John Reardon, R-Boise, said it is time to think about the families of crime victims, for a change, instead of the criminals. He called it a "good beginning."

Keep name off highway signs, governor asked

BOISE (UPI) — Rep. Gary Ingram, R-Coeur d'Alene, asked Gov. John V. Evans Monday to discontinue the practice of signing the governor's name to anti-litter highway signs.

Ingram earlier talked the House-State Affairs Committee into introducing a bill to prohibit elected officials from putting their names on highway signs. Then, he asked the Printing Committee not to print the bill and asked Evans to discontinue the practice.

He said there was a constitutional question concerning a misdemeanor for an act which has already taken place. "In addition, he wrote the governor, there is some question about whether federal and state campaign financing would include use of these funds for erecting billboards."

"I believe it is bad public policy to continue the practice of having the chief executive's name prominently displayed along our highways in connection with the anti-litter signs," Ingram wrote Evans. "I would respectfully request that you not continue this practice."

He said he likes the message on the signs and if they would have a better impact by being signed, suggested that signature be "the citizens of Idaho."

Former Gov. Cecil D. Andrus signed an anti-litter sign along the "highways" and, Ingram said the State Affairs Committee, there was talk his signature would be replaced by that of Evans.

Water plan bill to floor

BOISE (UPI) — The constitutional right of the legislature to overview the State Water Plan didn't phase the Senate Resources and Environment Committee Monday.

The committee voted to send the House-approved measure to the floor for action. Sen. Norma Dobler, D-Moscow, said before the committee sent the bill out, it should obtain an opinion as to the constitutionality of the legislature to interfere with the plan adopted by the Idaho Water Resources Board.

"I don't think the legislature has the right to do this under the constitution," she said. She said the constitution gave the board the authority and the legislature "is really overstepping our bounds."

Sen. Reed Budge, R-Soda Springs, acting as committee chairman in the absence of ailing chairman William Marsden, R-Idaho Falls, assured Mrs. Dobler it "still comes under the legislature."

School funds passed

BOISE (UPI) — After a very brief debate, the House completed legislative action 67-2 Monday on a bill appropriating $100,218,800 from the general fund for the public schools next year.

Initiated in the Senate, the bill — which appropriates a total of $145,557,700 from all funds — goes now to the governor for consideration. It contains the largest single appropriation from the general fund.

Floor sponsor Kurt Johnson, R-Idaho Falls, said the appropriation is a necessary one. Rep. Percival Wesche, R-Nampa, said, that while he would vote for it, he felt the appropriation is inadequate — calling the amount "disappointing."

Rep. John Reardon, R-Boise, defended recent legislative appropriations to the public schools and said there often is spending where there is no accountability.

Idaho court decision denies first amendment

Lewiston Morning Tribune reporter Jay Shelley has a good reputation among his peers. Shelley is known for his accuracy and for his sense of fair play.

A few days ago Shelley was rewarded for being a good, tough reporter by the Idaho Supreme Court. In a 3-2 decision, the Supreme Court upheld Shelley's conviction for contempt of court because the Lewiston Journalist would not reveal the name of one source used in 1973 news story.

Lewiston Tribune publisher A.L. Alford Jr. has vowed to continue the defense of Shelley in federal courts. As Alford put it, "for any newspaper worth its salt, finding the news is a duty. We cannot do it well if we are selectively denied our sources."

Alford, and all journalists, know that unnamed sources occasionally must be used by reporters. Use of unnamed sources never is the first choice of a journalist but sometimes is the only way a big story can be printed.

If the Idaho Supreme Court decision stands, journalists throughout the state will have lost an invaluable tool of their trade.

Without being able to assure the anonymity of some news sources, journalists have lost part of the First Amendment guarantee of a free press.

Many news sources, because of the jobs they hold, because they fear for their lives or because of any number of other reasons do not want their names used as sources in news stories.

Yet these same sources, when they have information which is important to a news story, will often tell what they know if their names are not used.

Journalists must be able to guarantee the privacy of an unnamed source. The Supreme Court's ruling which makes criminals out of responsible journalists destroys the ability of good reporters to do their best work.

The Idaho Supreme Court had a chance to reinforce the first amendment guarantee of a free press in the Shelley case. Instead of upholding this constitutional guarantee, the high court knocked another support out from under the Idaho media.

Berry's World

"It's water for a friend in California!"

VAN GOGH

SHOULD HAVE BEEN SO LUCKY

If the great Impressionist had lived in the right place at the right time — California today — he might have held on to an ear. That state has taken note of a long disadvantaged group — artists — and is moving to give them a long-term stake in the increasing value of their works. A report on art for the sake of art, plus a reasonable cash consideration, by MURRAY OLDERMAN.

SAN FRANCISCO — In all his lifetime, Vincent Van Gogh sold only one painting — and that was to his brother Theo when he desperately needed some bread. Today, the sale of just one Van Gogh original can keep a person commuting comfortably for a lifetime between Southampton and Palm Beach or, let's say, Lake Tahoe and Palm Springs.

Poor Vincent, unappreciated esthetically or materially, sliced an ear off in a fit of derangement. He would have been even crazier if he had realized how the value of his art has escalated in 100 years, without any benefit to him.

The state of California has made a remarkable, even drastic step forward to remedy the imbalance between the proceeds that go to an artist for his work and the later resale when that work multiplies manifold in value.

It is called Assembly Bill No. 1391 and it came into law, passed by the California legislature and signed by the governor, on Jan. 1 of this year. The bill provides that on any resale of a work of fine art for more than $1,000, the artist shall receive 5 percent of the amount of such sale.

"For the first time," says Richard Mayer, "artists working in collective advocacy have effected a change in the art market."

Mayer is president of the Northern California chapter of Artists Equity, an organization embracing 9,000 members across the land, and a prime factor in getting Assemblyman Alan Sierdy to introduce the bill in the state legislature.

Mayer is himself a practicing sculptor with a Master of Fine Arts degree from the San Francisco Art Institute. But he derives most of his income as a bartender — he was known, he says, as "the fastest bottle at the Mark" in his hold down years at the "top of the Mark" (Hopkins Motel), "where I really got turned on by the visual experience."

"Very few artists work full time," he explains. "To accept a vocation as an artist is to understand you're going to have a divided life. Only a small fraction of the 85,000 artists in the United States subsist solely on their professional creativity."

Mayer did win the Purchase Award at the 1974 San Francisco Art Festival, and he dedicates most of his day to the creation of uniquely conceived sculptural and metal pieces in his garage-sized studio in the Richmond district of the city — and to preserving his ties to that work, which are priced as high as $2,800.

"The imbalance between the artist and his work is never severed," he says, "although legally it is. Our personal dream has been to have residual rights: In France, the droit de suite (right of succession) has been a tradition, with the artist getting 3 percent from works sold at public auction."

The California Resale Royalties Act, as the present bill is commonly known, has been enthusiastically endorsed by such nationally prominent artists as Robert Rauschenberg, whose early work,

"Tiav," escalated from $800 to a later resale price of $85,000 without any further compensation to him.

Under the law, the seller of a piece of art who resides in California or resells a piece in this state must seek out the original artist within 90 days and give him a 5 percent royalty on the entire resale price. If he cannot find the artist, the royalty money goes to the California Arts Council.

"It's an easy law to comply with," says Mayer. "It's also an easy law to evade. It really needs to be federal law."

A similar royalty bill is now being contemplated in Ohio, and one is projected soon in New York. The visual artist for the first time joins his brethren in music and writing to receive royalty rights.

But within the art community, the resale royalty concept also has severe critics. Among them is law professor John Merriman, who teaches a course in art and the law at Stanford University.

"This is the 'Roths' — Rauschenberg benefit law," he proclaims cynically. "He doesn't need the money. He's living on an island in Florida. Roy Lichtenstein (master of pop art) doesn't need the money."

"The statute is of dubious constitutionality, with an excessive reach of legislative jurisdiction. If I buy a Miro in Paris, take it to Zurich and sell it to a collector at a profit, why should California require me to pay 5 percent?"

Merriman's main thrust is that the law doesn't benefit artists who most need the help — struggling ones whose work sells for under $1,000. He argues that most art dealers promote unrecognized artists at a loss, for the sheer passion of their field, and subsidize the works in the "back room," reselling the paintings of substantial artists. "This bill makes it harder for them to do it," he maintains, "and therefore hurts the art community."

"The bill is a cynical sop to the artists' community," says Sheldon Greene, a lawyer-collector who has researched its effect for a group planning to challenge the law's constitutionality. "It's a grandstand gimmick that doesn't produce anything except help only a handful of artists who don't need the money."

Ruth Bronstein, who runs the Quay Gallery in San Francisco, notes, "People are not buying art as much as they did before. It's not been a well thought out law. Dealers and museums people weren't even contacted until after the law was passed. It's unenforceable and naive. It's so easy to cheat, it's unbelievable. The hearts of the legislators were in the right place, but they were ill advised."

She believes that instead of a five percent royalty on the entire sale price, it should be 15 percent of the net profit to prevent inequity (if, on a $100,000 painting selling for $101,000, the present royalty of $5,050 means a $4,050 loss for the seller).

Artists themselves approve almost unanimously of the step taken in California. If only to accord them recognition.

International economic problems given low priority by Carter

By THOMAS E. MULLANEY
N.Y. Times Service

NEW YORK — International economic problems have slipped quietly into the background in this country during the early months of 1977 — and quite naturally, since serious domestic issues and the effects of the abnormally cold weather have usurped as much attention. Before long, however, there could be a change in focus.

No doubt the questions of injecting additional stimulus into the American economy, creating many more new jobs and trying to control inflation better will continue to draw the lion's share of political and business attention for some time ahead. But, as it becomes clear that the nation's economic growth was not seriously impaired by the wicked weather and the natural-gas shortage in the first quarter, fears over the domestic outlook should recede. It will be recognized that the recovery here is not only intact, but also strong and well ahead of the pace in most other lands.

Nevertheless, the financial markets may find it less easy to become more sanguine over inflation prospects, the federal deficit and future monetary policy. Some analysts believe the markets have been overreacting so far this year to the inflation threat, and that their performance might be less dramatic in the near future once that conclusion is accepted. If that proves to be so, some international trade and monetary issues might soon again be thrust into more prominent public discussion.

Those problems might have been sidelined from public view in the United States lately because of the focus on the activities of a new administration and the other issues, but they have not disappeared, nor diminished, despite the recent relative calmness of the foreign exchange markets.

It required massive monetary intervention by the central banks of several countries, however, to calm the exchange markets — an estimated $21 billion in the six months, which was an enormous amount for such a short period and much beyond the degree of intervention when the world was on a fixed-exchange monetary system. It also required, the bank noted, a move by the authorities of several countries to bring about internal and external balance in their economies.

Britain, particularly, had to resort to strong fiscal and monetary restraint, linked to several large international loans that she received last year. France and Italy also had to adopt some tough measures.

Subsequently, the United States and Japan embarked on more stimulative economic policies, as well as West Germany. The United States has sought still more stimulative actions by these three "engine" countries to try to generate a more pronounced upswing in other nations, but Japan and Germany have rejected pleas for greater stimulus so far.

The latest rejection of such a suggestion by the Carter administration was made by the two nations at a meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris on Wednesday.

Worried about the inflationary consequences of a faster economic growth rate, Japan and Germany both feel they have gone as far as they can prudently go at this time. No doubt the subject will be aired further later this month in Washington when the Japanese Premier, Takeo Fukuda, meets with President Carter.

The main item on the agenda in their March 20-21 talks, however, may be the massive trade problems that still exist between the two countries, specifically the huge trade imbalance that has favored Japan. The United States has been suggesting for some time that Japan take steps to reduce that balance, particularly through voluntary restriction of steel and color television receiver shipments here. There have recently been some indications that Japan has been moving in that direction, though shipments still remain quite high on those key products.

And the Japanese Premier also said recently that he would welcome a rise in the value of the yen — something the United States has been strongly favoring — though he indicated his government did not intend to press the selling of dollars but would continue to intervene in the exchange markets only to soften sharp movements.

There has also been concern about other currencies, including the German mark, which some softness believe is still overvalued; the traditionally strong Swiss franc, which has recently been under unusual pressure as holders moved into other currencies and into gold; the Canadian dollar, the Mexican peso, the Spanish peseta and the Portuguese escudo.

The continuing currency turmoil, though less than it was last year, still poses serious problems for world trade progress. This year's sharp comeback in the price of gold constitutes another indication of concern over the international economic picture. Despite periodic sales of gold by the International Monetary Fund, including last week's offering of $24,400 ounces that drew prices averaging slightly more than the prevailing quotation in London, demand for the precious metal there to run strong. Some of the clamor for it springs from increased needs in industry, but much doubtless represents speculative fear over paper money in an era of continuing high inflation.

By last Thursday, the London price for gold had gotten as high as $345 an ounce, the highest closing price in 15 months. It had been as low as $201 as recently as last September.

While resurgent inflation remains as probably the No. 1 worry in most countries, the chief financial problem for the industrial world and the developing world alike remains the huge cost of oil from the Organization for Petroleum Exporting Countries. At the present time, the non-oil-exporting countries are accumulating annual deficits at slightly over $40 billion a year.

— a huge obligation that they must fund year after year through borrowings.

In discussing that problem at a Conference Board meeting in New York 10 days ago, Alan Greenspan, formerly the chief economic adviser to the Federal administration, said:

"It is clear that the deterioration in the borrowing capabilities of much of the world cannot go on indefinitely. Deficits of $40 billion, cumulating year after year, eventually will create such a huge debt structure that most Western industrial nations, and ultimately the United States itself, will find it difficult to meet the interest and amortization charges of the loans."

He said that either the real price of oil must be brought down from "a $13 a barrel or hold relatively stable while other prices rise," or the world must find a way to reduce its dependence on OPEC. Diplomatically, he must impress on OPEC the seriousness of continued oil price increases to the stability of the world of which they are an integral part.

No Alaskan oil for US

By EDWIN DARBY
Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — It takes 7½ days for oil to flow from the oil-fields of Prudhoe Bay on the North Slope of Alaska through the Alaska pipeline to the shipping port of Valdez on the southern coast of Alaska. The first oil will start reaching Valdez this summer. There, the flow of the black gold stops.

The first oil from the North Slope and Valdez won't reach the continental United States before January of next year. The big problem is that the pipeline and the pump-and-odd-tanks are still being built.

But even in 1979, when the pipeline will be able to move a bonanza of one million barrels of oil a day into Valdez and when those port facilities will be able to pump 150,000 barrels an hour, aboard a tanker, there will still be large questions about getting the precious crude to points where it is needed.

Alaskan oil will very quickly be in surplus supply on the West coast. It's needed in the East.

One proposal is to send Alaska oil to Japan in return for an equal amount of Midland oil destined for Japan but diverted to U.S. Atlantic ports. That plan, and various protests, are still being considered by the Federal Energy Administration. One real objection: The United States would still be as dependent on the Middle East as it was before the great Alaskan project.

One of the Big Three companies in the Alaska pipeline, Standard Oil of Ohio, has already chartered tankers that could take the oil on the gulf coast trip through the Panama Canal, or even around Cape Horn, to the East Coast.

But, Solio's master plan for getting the oil East is to build a pipeline from the Long Beach (Calif.) port to connect with an existing but unused pipeline that runs from New Mexico to Midland, Tex. At Midland, the oil could be fed into the general pipeline network.

That existing and unused line is a natural-gas pipeline. Solio will have to get permission from the Federal Power Commission to convert the line. More important, Solio faces an environmental fight in Long Beach where there are bitter objections to tank farms and tankers.

A couple of other working propositions offer a way to get the Alaskan oil east. One is the construction of a pipeline from Port Angeles, Oregon, across the northern tier states to Clearbrook, Minn., for connection into the Lakehead pipeline to St. Paul and the Chicago area. The other is a similar line farther north from Klamath, British Columbia, to Edmonton, Alberta, and then south into the same Midwest pipeline system.

He'll keep water

Editor, Times-News:
In the document entitled, "The State Water Plan—part 2, Chapter 1, page 1—first sentence and I quote:
"The State Water Plan was adopted by the Water Resource Board to guide the development, management and use of the state's water and related land."
On page 146 is the section called "conclusions—subtitle." Agriculture is the recommendation listed as No. 4.
"Sale of contract for existing reservoir stored water should be allowed. If the transfer of these contracts held by the Bureau of Reclamation is allowed and encouraged, users of water will tend to become more efficient. Removing transfer restraints will speed movement into other uses including environmental uses."

In other words, the scheme is to remove the water from the land.
Every farmer knows that the economic environment determines his profit and this is determined by having an adequate supply of water. Consequently the business man of Idaho is best protected by a healthy farming community. Article XV, Section 4, of the Idaho State Constitution says:
"Continuing rights to water guaranteed. Whenever any waters have been or shall be appropriated or used for agriculture purposes, under a sale, rental, or distribution thereof, such sale, rental, or distribution shall be deemed an exclusive dedication to such use; and whenever such waters so dedicated shall have once been sold, rented or distributed to any person who has settled upon or improved land for agriculture purposes with the view of receiving the benefit of such water under such dedication, such person, his heirs, successors, administrators, successors, or assigns, shall not thereafter, without his consent, be deprived of the annual use of the same, when needed for domestic purposes, or to irrigate the land so settled upon or improved, upon payment therefore, and compliance with such equitable terms and conditions as to the quantity used and times of use, as may be prescribed by law."

Knowledge of unions questioned

Editor, Times-News:
I think James Herrett does not know any thing about unions.
The union is a group of people united together. We do not buy our jobs from unions. Where we ask for a job and if they tell us they are covered by union, then our freedom is to say no thank you I do not wish to join the United People, and go some other place for a job.
Our church, lodges, unions do not demand anyone to join, but they do ask you to do your part and not be a free rider. Unions do not discriminate against anyone.

Locks cut

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (UPI)—Passage through navigation locks on four Lower Snake River dams will be put on a limited schedule later this month to conserve water, according to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.
Duane Rowling, chief of the corps' operations division in Walla Walla, said passages through the locks will be placed on a schedule to reduce the number of times locks must be filled and drained.
The schedule will begin in late March as the agency reviews its water uses in this year of reduced rainfall and snowpack.
There will be two upstream and two downstream passages daily at Ted Hartman, Lower Monumental, Little Goose and Lower Granite dams, Downing said.

Hearing set

BOISE (UPI)—A public hearing on welfare reform will be held in Boise March 18 by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.
Bernard E. Kelly, HEW regional director in Seattle, said registration of hearing participants will begin at 8 a.m. and the Boise hearing will run from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. If necessary, the hearing will be held at the west conference room in the State Office building, 700 W. State.
Written comments can be mailed until March 18 to Leslie Wellesman, Region X Welfare Reform Outreach Coordinator, HEW, M.S. 505, Arcade Plaza Building, 121 Second Ave., Seattle, Wa. 98101.

canal boards the right to separate the water from the land. This is what the dissidents have been trying to tell the farmers. The canal boards have not properly advised the shareholders that this is a possibility.
Note that the constitution refers to a person and his water right and not a company or district and their powers to act.
I have not, nor do I now, nor will I ever, give anyone my consent to separate my irrigation water from the ground. I will not permit another person to make a decision for me with regards to this issue. I hereby give public notice regarding my stand on this issue.
I recommend that each person who has a voting right to advise his canal board and the attorney general of the state of Idaho that this is his decision. It is to the advantage of every business man to take a similar position.
Suppose it were possible for the water to be separated from the land—(not appurtenant to the land). Consider the dangerous consequence of such a situation. Mortgage money may possibly vanish, operating loans could dry up.
If the worst did not happen, at least additional protective costs would occur to the purchaser of the ground. It could bring about the situation wherein only persons or cooperations with large amounts of money could make land transfers.
During some seasons the farmer may not need all the water appurtenant to the ground while some dry years, as this may well be, much more may be needed.
If the farmer should consent to the separation of the water from the ground in a wet year, he may find that he has sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.

I realize that land is one's own, and that any person has rights related to that land. Yet, what one does with his land does effect neighbors, community members and anyone who might someday live in the area. Type of development and what is displaced by that development shapes the character of the area and what will then be missing.
Consider land ownership. It was paid for in one form or another. But ownership in reality is not for 10,000 years or eternally, whichever comes first. It is stewardship. The chance to hold this stewardship (or ownership) is not universal, but something granted or refused by the society one lives in. Rights certainly accompany this stewardship, but so do responsibilities. One of those responsibilities is that any change be reasonable considering all factors that might be effected. That is the function of land use planning on the local level. Take the possible minimum acreage requirements of 5, 40 and 80 acres. The closer to a municipality the smaller the requirement. The idea is to encourage development closer to a town where further planning can encourage it to be more orderly.
In a few places the responsibilities have been attended to without restrictions. But I know of many more that have not been orderly developed. Better planning would have helped in the town where I grew up, Moses Lake, Washington. Visitors to this town of 11,000 often ask, "How did your town get as sprawled out as this?" Some sellers ignored their responsibilities and just took advantage of the right to a "fast buck".
And the Puget Sound area one can often find prime farm ground with a building or asphalt on it and waste ground sitting idle not too far away. This never will happen in Idaho! Well, closer to home look at Boise. People who have lived there say it is a sprawled city. It would be a shame if we in Twin Falls County cannot learn from other communities' mistakes.

Now look at what gets displaced by development locally. Often excellent farm ground while more marginal ground might stay idle. I can see why some replanters object to land use planning. It is easier to sell ground that is easy to build on with good deep soil than marginal ground that may be rocky.
Yet if there is no planning to determine what kind of ground is best used, for development and what is better left for alternative uses, is this not ignoring the responsibilities that go along with the rights of ownership?
I hope that everyone, no matter what their view, can consider all possibilities with an open mind. Consider whether land planning, or lack of it, effects your rights or your neighbors. Then look to see if your stand takes into account your responsibilities as well as your rights. Determine whether your support or opposition will help to leave this valley the way you want your grandchildren to see it. And finally, ask yourself what approach to the future will best preserve that which needs to be preserved while allowing the greatest possible freedom toward orderly development. If you have considered all these people and factors and find what you feel is the best for EVERYONE, I hope you stick up and speak out for what you believe.

Land use planning, from both sides

Editor, Times-News:

I recognize two sides to the current land use planning controversy and would like to express my feelings about both sides.

I realize that land is one's own, and that any person has rights related to that land. Yet, what one does with his land does effect neighbors, community members and anyone who might someday live in the area. Type of development and what is displaced by that development shapes the character of the area and what will then be missing.

Now look at what gets displaced by development locally. Often excellent farm ground while more marginal ground might stay idle. I can see why some replanters object to land use planning. It is easier to sell ground that is easy to build on with good deep soil than marginal ground that may be rocky.

Yet if there is no planning to determine what kind of ground is best used, for development and what is better left for alternative uses, is this not ignoring the responsibilities that go along with the rights of ownership?

I hope that everyone, no matter what their view, can consider all possibilities with an open mind. Consider whether land planning, or lack of it, effects your rights or your neighbors. Then look to see if your stand takes into account your responsibilities as well as your rights. Determine whether your support or opposition will help to leave this valley the way you want your grandchildren to see it. And finally, ask yourself what approach to the future will best preserve that which needs to be preserved while allowing the greatest possible freedom toward orderly development. If you have considered all these people and factors and find what you feel is the best for EVERYONE, I hope you stick up and speak out for what you believe.

Arguing bad business

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Humberto Rodriguez found out the hard way that arguing with a taxi driver is bad business. Rodriguez, 22, objected to what he felt was an excessive fare and the driver pulled out a pistol and shot him twice, police said Monday.

Rodriguez is recovering in a local hospital. He said the cabbie pushed him out of the car and fled the scene.

Lead added to peppers

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — A peasant woman sprinkled pepper lead on her dried red peppers in order to make them heavier and get a better price, but wound up putting 70 Yugoslavs in the hospital.

Police investigated what health authorities reported was an "unknown epidemic" and found adulterated peppers caused the hospitalizations.

The peasant woman had put the lead in the peppers before taking them to market in the northern town of Osijek because she wanted to make her peppers heavier, Belgrade radio said. Peppers are sold by the pound.

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Groucho Marx, who underwent weekend surgery to replace a fractured right hip joint, is "alert and awake" and walking without assistance.

"He is coming along very well," a spokesman at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center said Monday.

The 86-year-old comedian underwent 39 minutes of surgery last Saturday. He was taken to the hospital Friday night by actor Elliott Gould.

Gilmore story published

CHICAGO (UPI) — Convicted killer Gary Gilmore told Playboy magazine in an interview before his execution that he would have continued his murder spree if he had not been caught and jailed.

Gilmore, in an interview published in the April edition of Playboy, said the killings of Max Jensen and Pennie Bushnell in small robberies on successive nights in Provo, Utah, were the result of his rage and frustration over the breakup of his relationship with his girlfriend, Nicole Barrett.

The robberies were incidental, Gilmore said. His intent was to kill someone — anyone — to vent his rage. "I didn't want to kill Nicole. Because" was thinking about killing her and if I had killed her I would have killed myself. I wasn't thinking. I was just doing it."

"I had to either get her back or something else was going to happen."

The "something else" was murder.

"He said if he hadn't been caught the night of the second slaying — that of Bushnell — 'until I got caught or shot to death by the police or something like that.'"

Asked if there would have been a third or fourth killing, Gilmore answered: "There would have been more than that, that night."

Interviewers Larry Schiller and Barry Farrel talked with Gilmore on a number of occasions in December to January, including the eve of his execution.

He once said that if freed, he'd get a gun, get Nicole out of the mental hospital where she was placed after both she and Gilmore attempted suicide and pistol-whip attorneys who worked to halt his execution.

But Gilmore had a suicide plan prepared in case his Jan. 17 date with the firing squad at the Utah State Penitentiary was put off.

Gilmore had "stolen" some shoelaces from the maximum-security superintendent's office the morning of Jan. 15, Playboy said.

On the afternoon before the execution, when a judge was considering another stay order, Gilmore told interviewers: "I'll just hang myself tonight if they stay it."

"The shoelaces?" the interviewer asked.

"You guessed it," replied Gilmore.

Dylan wins court ruling

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — Singer Bob Dylan has won a court ruling to have certain legal documents in his divorce case closed to the public.

Superior Court Judge Edward Rafeedie approved the action sealing the records Monday to protect Dylan, his estranged wife and their five children from harassment and annoyance.

Nude bathers still on beach

SCHLESWIG, West Germany (UPI) — The owner of a weekend cottage failed in his attempt to have police drive off nude men and women using the sandy beach of Eckenforde day in defiance of local statutes prohibiting bathing in the nude.

In a decision published over the weekend, the Schleswig-Holstein state administrative court said even though nude bathers were defying local statutes, they did not disturb public order and police therefore could not be criticized for refusing to drive them away.

Immunization program 'success'

DETROIT (UPI) — School officials say school attendance figures for Monday prove a crash immunization program in the nation's fifth largest school district was an overwhelming success.

"We knew that it was quite a task to undertake," Richard Smart, the school system's health department chief, said Monday. "I would say it has been a tremendous success."

Officials cracking down on lax compliance with immunization rules implemented a "no shots-no school" policy and set Monday as the deadline. Children were required to show proof of immunization against a variety of diseases or be sent home.

School officials said they had no accurate count of children sent home for lack of immunization, but said the number was less than 400.

About 1,500 students had not been immunized at the start of school Monday but officials said a majority of them received their shots during the day.

During a 7-hour period Monday, more than 500 youngsters received inoculations at one clinic and business was reported brisk at the two other sites.

The inoculations were aimed at preventing measles, polio, rubella (German measles), tetanus, whooping cough and diphtheria.

Special weekend clinics around the city did an overflow business as parents hurried to have their youngsters vaccinated before the deadline. Several hundred more, officials said, received inoculations at family physicians' offices or private clinics.

Vaccinations were to be available for several days for children still not immunized. Health officials instituted the stiff policy to combat "dangerously low" levels of immunization — among those entering schools last fall. It was estimated that at least 30 per cent of the youngsters were not inoculated.

The Detroit system was hit by a near-epidemic of measles last year. Officials said this year would have been even worse had they not adopted a get-tough policy.

Billy will miss shindig

LUCKENBACH, Tex. (UPI) — The three residents of this Texas Hill Country town have withdrawn their invitation to Billy Carter to serve as Mayor for a Day at the March 19 "Mud Daubers Come Back to Luckenbach" celebration.

"We're withdrawing the invitation for him to be Mayor for a Day," Colby Morgan, First Lady of Luckenbach, said Monday. Carter hasn't responded and the people of Luckenbach, site of periodic beer-drinking "bashes," said they've waited long enough.

Mrs. Morgan said she has been calling Carter's filling station, peanut warehouse and residence to no avail.

"Everybody who comes to Mud Dauber Day on March 19 will just have that much more beer to drink," she said.

Jack Harmon, a regular at the affair which includes such events as "The World Championship Moose Contest," said Billy probably doesn't like mud daubers anyway.

"Every winter, the dust storms take the Texas topsoil and drop it clear over in Georgia on top of the Carter peanuts," Harmon said. "And just like clockwork or like the swallows that come to Capistrano, every March 19, the Mud Daubers bring the top soil back to Texas."

"Half of it they bring to Luckenbach; the Mud Dauber Capital of the World. The other half they take to Floresville to cause trouble — gonna try peanuts. Billy has a right not to like Mud Daubers. Big Jawn doesn't drink beer and he's a Republican besides."

Gas diversion admitted

© N.Y. Times Service
WASHINGTON — Tenneco Inc., which runs one of the nation's biggest natural gas operations, improperly diverted gas contracted to interstate customers and sent it instead to a Texas subsidiary that could charge much higher prices, the company disclosed Monday.

The amount of gas covered by these transactions since 1985 appeared to be substantial, but was probably not an important factor in this winter's gas shortage.

Tenneco said in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that it uncovered the diversions while preparing its defense against suits brought against it for failure to deliver gas to two corporate customers.

It estimated the volume sold to its Channel Industries Gas Co. subsidiary in Texas during the period was 350 billion cubic feet but said only "some" of this represented gas released from contracts for sale through procedures "which may have failed to meet all regulatory requirements" under the Natural Gas Act.

A company spokesman at Tenneco's Houston headquarters said he would not comment on the registration statement, or on a petition Tenneco filed with the Federal Power Commission Feb. 26, seeking a decision on whether additional approvals were needed and if so that they be granted. A copy of the petition could not be obtained Monday.

An FPC official said that the commission on at least one recent occasion dealt rather severely with a case involving failure to fulfill gas contracts.

In a separate development, the FPC modified its traditional policy of permitting offshore producers of natural gas to set aside up to half their production for use in fertilizer, chemical and propane plants owned by themselves or by others.

Concorde decision delay inflames spat over plane

By United Press International
A decision on whether to allow the Concorde supersonic jet to land in New York has been postponed for at least a month, further inflaming the international spat over the Anglo-French plane.

The New York Port Authority, which controls access to John F. Kennedy Airport, said Monday it delayed a decision scheduled for Thursday to allow technicians to present new alternative noise abatement procedures to the Port Authority technical staff and consultants.

The PA said the delay was granted at the request of Charles Goodell, a Washington lawyer representing the French Minister of Transport and acting on behalf of both Air France and British Airways, the two airlines trying to secure the landing rights.

But Goodell denied the claim and Air France said the decision caught it by surprise.

"This is the first we've heard of it," Air France spokesman Lambert Mayer said Monday night.

In London, a spokesman for the Department of Trade also denied that British Airways or British Airways International had asked for the delay.

Sources in Paris said it was the plane's builders, and not the airlines, who had requested the indefinite postponement.

The sources said the French state-owned Aerospatiale Co. and the British Aircraft Corp. had asked through their New York lawyers for more time to study ways of reducing the plane's landing noise.

Goodell, declaring "our patience has run out," said he would take the dispute to court if the PA does not act by next Tuesday. But a PA spokesman said the delay would last "at least 30 days."

It is not the first time the question has been bounced around.

The Port Authority originally delayed a March 10 decision while it heard out community groups, who say Concorde makes too much noise, and the airlines, who say the plane conforms to federal noise standards.

The latest delay came during a "stalemate" among diplomatic, commercial, and publicity campaign supporting Concorde's request for landing rights.

Former French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert said that if permission was refused, "Americans must be warned that some day France and the French people will demand to leave the North Atlantic Alliance."

A French businessman, Jean-Claude Decaux, took out a full page in Monday's New York Times at a personal cost of $10,000 to appeal to Americans not to bar Concorde.

In addition, the Concorde Support Committee and two regional French newspapers announced they have collected 110,000 signatures on a pro-Concorde petition.

Linda is the victim of an epidemic ...

The greatestcrippler and killer in the nation—
it's called "drinking."

Linda was crippled in an auto accident. She's one of 500,000 people injured or killed last year in accidents involving "drinking" drivers. In Linda's case, her mom was driving—after a couple of drinks. Only a couple. But they were enough to cause a mistake in judgment. And now Linda can't walk. More than 100 million Americans drink. The number increases each year. And so does the number who drive after drinking. The epidemic grows. Drivers who drink are more likely to be involved in accidents—Linda knows this. So does her mom. It's too late for Linda. But not too late for her mom and others.

Containers banned

WASHINGTON (UPI)
The Food and Drug Administration is banning interstate shipment of beverages in acrylonitrile containers because the plastic might cause birth defects in animals, federal doctors said Monday.

The agency said it knows of only two companies that have marketed beverages in acrylonitrile plastic bottles: Coca-Cola (test-marketed soft drinks in the bottles made by Monsanto Corp. and Musselman Fruit Products sold fruit juices in containers made by Borg-Warner).

"Since there is no danger to the public from the limited number of beverage bottles now available, there is no need for a recall," the FDA said. Its order banning shipment takes effect Monday.

The agency also announced a proposal to lower the maximum amount of acrylonitrile permitted to leach into products from margarine tubs, vegetable oil bottles, food wrappers and other non-beverage packing made of the plastic.

The present maximum level is 300 parts of acrylonitrile per billion parts of the product. FDA proposed this be lowered to 50 parts per billion.

Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1977 by Chicago Tribune & N. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 13, and I've had it with my mother. She has absolutely no respect for my personal privacy. When I'm gone she goes through my room, all my belongings and everything I own.

I've never given her any reason not to trust me, but she asks me where I get every penny of my money, who I've been hanging around with and what they're like.

I've asked her to please stop going through my things, but it doesn't do any good. Please help me, but don't send your reply in the mail because she reads my mail, too.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Teen says mom snoops

DEAR OPEN: Violating one's reasonable privacy at any age breeds disrespect, but try to see your mother's side of it. Parents are responsible for their underage children, and your mother is apparently a little nervous about you. Continue to give her no reason to mistrust you, and eventually her confidence will grow and her suspicions cease.

DEAR ABBY: There is a little girl in our neighborhood who likes to bite other children. My children have been bitten by her several times and I am tired of it. I have heard that a human bite can be more serious than a dog's bite. Is that true?

CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: Yes, if the skin has been broken, the victim should be protected against infection by a tetanus shot. Also, antibiotics are recommended, depending on the severity of the bite. A human bite CAN be more serious than an animal bite.

DEAR ABBY: I am married and am the father of two children who are both in grade school.

For seven years I have been seeing land for the most part supporting a beautiful woman and her two school-age children, who are not mine. (I made it clear from the start that I was married, and divorcing my wife was out of the question.)

This woman has decided that we should not see each other anymore because she wants to get married, and her children need a father. I happen to agree with her, but there's one thing we do not agree on: She thinks I should continue to send her checks until she finds a job or a man to support herself and her children. She says that's the least I can do for her.

I say I'm not seeing each other, we stop the whole thing—including the money. She says she can't get along without my financial support, and if I discontinue it while she is in need she will tell all to my wife.

I would feel like a fool sending her money, but I would crush my wife and ruin my marriage if I ever found out.

I know I've had my cake and eaten it too all these years, but I need your sound advice.

WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: Anyone who is threatened with blackmail, and has as much to lose as you apparently have, should run—not walk—to his lawyer.

For Abby's new booklet, "What Teenagers Want to Know," send $1 to Abigail Van Buren, 132 Laasy Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. Please enclose a "long self-addressed, stamped (244) envelope."

your health

Dr. Lamb, my husband and I are in our upper 60s and quite well. We keep y and thank our Lord daily for our good health.

We watch our diets, as I do have high cholesterol. Luckily I've been kind of a health nut most of my life so I have been moderate in all things.

I am writing you for the Health Letter number 4-7, Weight Lossing Diet. We both love to eat and there is that problem of keeping our weight down so I thought maybe we could get a few suggestions that would help.

We are both like right weight for our age and want to keep it that way.

Dear Reader,

Yes, I would be glad to send it to you but your letter did not have your address on it. I'd like to take this opportunity to tell all readers to be sure they have their address on their letter as well as on a long self-addressed, stamped envelope. Because it is complete and clear enough to be read, others who want information on weight control can send 50 cents for this issue with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing. Write to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10103.

You are wise to want to prevent obesity. To paraphrase an old saying, "a pound of prevention is worth a pound of cure." You will be healthier and live longer in good health if you avoid obesity.

I designed the weight losing diet to be a balanced diet. It is the skeleton for any well-balanced diet. If you can use more calories and not gain fat then you can simply add what you like to the basic diet plan.

Also I want to emphasize the importance of remaining active. As you get older there is a tendency to do less physically. Make physical activity part of your daily life. A daily walk is great and helps prevent obesity. A good "fat prevention" program should include both a sensible diet plan and a sensible physical activity plan.

Dear Dr. Lamb,

Is it necessary for a 58-year-old woman who has not menstruated for 11 years to use protection during sex to prevent pregnancy? Please answer as this is very urgent.

Dear Reader,

This question keeps coming up. To solve your immediate problem the answer for you is NO.

For the rest of women with the question of "when can I stop birth control pills?" you should know there is no reliable record of any pregnancy in any woman after age 57.

In general, you can assume that if you have gone through the menopause and have not had a period for two years you are most unlikely to have a pregnancy. Some authorities say if a year has passed that is sufficient. I would recommend that a woman ask her doctor about her own status if there is any doubt about whether she has completed the menopause and she is less than 57 years old.

Remember that birth control pills are just female hormones and some doctors like to have women continue some of these to prevent the changes that occur with the menopause. So don't decide on your own that you should quit. Your doctor may have you on them for a good reason, or may wish to switch you to some other medicine to help you if you need hormone support during this phase of your life.

ERA hope still high

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The final deadline for states ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment still lies two years away and women's rights advocates plan a continuing fight to the end.

"It very well may go right down to the wire," says Mary Brooks, the League of Women Voters' expert on the proposed 27th Amendment which dies March 22, 1979, unless it has been ratified by 38 states.

Constitutional amendments must be ratified within seven years after passage by Congress. The ERA was passed March 22, 1972.

Prospects for 1977 ratification dwindled last week when the North Carolina legislature — following on the heels of Nevada — rejected the amendment. Some say the twin blows spelled a death warrant for the ERA, which has become a rallying point for women's rights advocates.

"Obviously," Ms. Brooks said, "it's a blow to the ratification effort this year. But it certainly does not cancel out the possibility of ratification."

Ms. Brooks and other leaders of the drive at the beginning of the year saw the possibility of achieving ratification in 1977, particularly with the vigorous support offered by President Carter and his wife, Rosalynn.

But votes in legislatures in North Carolina and Nevada bridled the momentum building since January when Indiana became the 35th state to ratify the amendment.

"It's going to be nip and tuck all the way, and it's not going to be a matter of momentum anymore," Ms. Brooks said. "We're going to be pulling it out one state at a time."

At least four more state legislatures — Florida, Missouri, Oklahoma and Illinois — are expected to vote on the amendment this year. But the odds are poor that it will be passed in three of these four states.

President Carter and his wife made several last-minute telephone calls asking legislators in North Carolina to vote for the Equal Rights Amendment. But the lobbying efforts were unsuccessful.

Ms. Brooks said the results of Carter's efforts "shows just how hard this fight has been" since 1975, when the drive toward ratification was stymied by a backlash among conservatives.

Carter aides said the President will wage a "more prolonged" campaign on behalf of ERA in the remaining states.

Ms. Brooks said the amendment was defeated in North Carolina by politics. She said it was impossible for Carter to compete with the pressures applied to lawmakers who also were seeking legislation affecting their home districts.

"It makes me mad that this issue can be dragged through the mud like it has been," she said. "Because we are women, they won't take this thing seriously."

Search for monster to resume

Hunt to resume

DR. ROBERT RINES in June will resume his seven-year hunt for the legendary Loch Ness monster, hoping to produce sketches like the one shown here. Rines, who with photographer, Charles Wyckoff, has installed underwater cameras in Loch Ness with a revised computer trigger system.

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Robert Rines in June will resume his seven-year hunt for the legendary Loch Ness monster, hoping to produce sketches like the one shown here. Rines, who with photographer, Charles Wyckoff, has installed underwater cameras in Loch Ness with a revised computer trigger system.

"We tested this out and have refined it to a point so we can make sure that the camera doesn't get triggered by a school of fish until it's one of these big things within camera range," Rines said.

The "big things" Rines referred to are the animals or animals he believes populate waters off the town of Drumadrochit, Scotland. In 1975, after Rines had been exploring the 900-foot-deep Loch for five years, an underwater camera caught a shadowy shape of what he said appeared to be a large, reptilian looking head with a long neck-like projection.

The photograph, coupled with a 1972 shot of what Rines described as a belly fin, only intensified his belief in Nessie's existence.

"I suppose if I hadn't had the misfortune of seeing the back of one of these things in 1972, I would have walked away," he said.

The expedition team was disappointed but not discouraged last summer by results from more than 100,000 time-elapsed photographs. They theorized a drought had lowered the Loch's level so the usual salmon spawning runs were not taking place to draw the animal from its lower depths to feed.

Rines said sonar equipment in Loch Ness last summer picked up on a "slender object," but it was below camera range. "The contact coincided with a startling hydrophone detection... of chip-like or rattle-like sounds which ceased before we could begin tape recording," he said.

The camera was "shooting blind," Rines said. But he hopes the new trigger system will not activate the equipment unless something "big enough with the right dimensions and characteristics" comes within range.

The revamped cameras are powered from shore instead of by batteries, allowing pictures every three or four seconds for a sequence of shots rather than just one still photograph. He said the team also may use a submarine to retrieve artifacts from the depths of Loch Ness or to explore underwater caves.

"As far as we're concerned, all that's going to happen in the future is we'll get better pictures of the same thing," said Rines, adding he's encouraged other scientists have joined the hunt.

"Now we have independent sonar experts getting exactly the same characteristics. Now it's been reproduced, and not just by me," he said. "It's a vitally important study in the way the scientific community is reacting to good hard data that stretches the imagination."

"We've been challenged to identify what these things are to demonstrate that science has to have a much more open mind than it has in the past in these areas."

Dennis the Menace now 30 years old

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Mr. Wilson isn't the only one who doesn't like Dennis the Menace.

Dennis Ketcham, the now 30-year-old son of cartoonist Hank Ketcham, said he "always resented" the blond imp with the cowlick who was modeled after him.

The real Dennis spent his teenage years in a boarding school, saw combat with the Marines in Vietnam, and has worked the last two months as a guard at the Ohio Penitentiary. He lives with his wife and child in nearby Circleville.

Ketcham said his comic strip counterpart made growing up a little more difficult.

"I was harassed all the time in school. Kids were always saying something to me. It took quite a few years to get used to it. I always resented him (the comic Dennis), a little."

He said he was about 5 years old when in 1951 his father conceived his famous alter ego with the passion for ketchup and the penchant for trouble.

"I don't remember it much. I was pretty average growing up. They told me my father came home one day after I had been into some mischief. My mother told him I was a real menace."

After graduation, Ketcham joined the Marines and saw 16 months of combat in Vietnam.

He said he came home to Arizona and California where he had lived as a boy to work at "horse wrangling."

He came to Circleville to visit a Marine friend and ended up meeting and marrying Roxanna Waites. They now have a 16-month-old daughter, Jennifer.

While the comic-strip Dennis idolizes Cowboy Bob, the real Dennis says, "I'd like to work on a cattle ranch again. I like the warmer weather."

Ketcham also said things are better between him and his father. He said he occasionally sees the artist, who lives with his wife and daughter in Switzerland, and "since I've been married, we've been closer. Dad said he has some regrets."

Guidelines set up for mammograms

CHICAGO (UPI) — A woman who has detected signs of breast cancer should submit to a breast X-ray regardless of her age without fear of aggravating her condition, the Journal of the American Medical Association said today.

However, a woman under 50 without symptoms of breast cancer should not be subjected to the breast X-rays until more research has been done to determine whether such mammography itself may cause cancer, the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation reported after extensive research.

Attempting to unravel the confusion among both physicians and patients—over whether women should have periodic mammograms to check for breast cancer, the JAMA published a series of guidelines from the Scripps Foundation.

The foundation reported doctors should follow practical guidelines when calling for mammograms.

It said a woman who has a high risk of breast cancer, such as strong family history or previous breast cancer, should receive periodic screening, including an X-ray. It also said periodic screening should be done for all women over age 50.

Dr. Harold M. Schwartz of the foundation said "for any individual woman, the risk of inducing breast cancer by mammography is very low."

Another report questioned the value, not the safety aspects of breast X-rays for women under 45 years of age.

Dr. Gerson J. Lesnick of Mount Sinai School of Medicine reported that 84 per cent of 106 women under 45 selected breast tumors themselves, and another 14 per cent had tumors found during routine examinations by doctors.

Dr. John C. Ballar of the National Institute of Health, wrote in an editorial that mammography is a "prevalent and hardgoing breast cancer but that the medical profession should take a careful look at the usefulness and safety of the procedure."

Resentment admitted

DENNIS Ketcham, Circleville, Ohio, real life model of comic strip character, Dennis the Menace, manages a slight grin as his daughter, Jennifer, 17 months, pulls a Dennis antic of checking to see if her new shoes are waterproof. Ketcham, the 30-year-old son of cartoonist Hank Ketcham, says he "always resented" the blond imp modeled after him. (UPI)

"Greed is a terrible thing," murmured East after South had found a way to get himself set at his four-heart contract. Now see if you can figure out the method adopted by South to wind up with only nine tricks. We'll give you a hint. East made a frightful play at trick one.

Specifically, after the 10 of clubs was played from dummy East played the deuce. This play gave up a club trick because it was obvious to East that his partner had led a singleton and that South would have no way to get rid of the six of clubs later on in the play.

At this point greed got the better of South. He didn't stop to realize that West would never have led away from king-queen after the strong two-club holding by South and that a trap was being set.

At trick two South led dummy's jack of diamonds and finessed whereupon the hand collapsed. West took his king and gave

TWIN FALLS — A slide presentation on the Holy Land was given by Rev. J.L. Chandler, pastor of the Calvary United Pentecostal Church, during the Friday meeting of Magic Valley Retired Teachers Association.

Rev. Chandler attended the International United Pentecostal Church conference in Jerusalem last November. He said between 300 and 400 delegates from 35 nations attended the meetings.

Slides taken by Rev. Chandler included some of the holy places which he said have deteriorated over the years and are now being restored. On hills around the city of Jerusalem a tree has been planted for each child born and some of the Jewish families have as many as 10 children.

Rev. Chandler said his slide show is available to all interested clubs or organizations. He suggested those planning to visit the Holy Land first read the Old Testament which contains the history of the area.

Rev. Chandler said most people in the area speak Hebrew or Arabic and English is also spoken by many. He said the meals were good and evening dinners often consisted of five courses.

Mrs. Loyal Perry and Mrs. William Pressey were program chairmen for the day.

Theme was "counting sheep." Mrs. Perry introduced the midweek, a musical group from the Twin Falls High School, directed by Richard Smack. Edith Nancolas, Jerome, gave invocation and a nominating committee was appointed.

Members on the committee include Mrs. Blanche Inama, chairman, and Mrs. Bernice Lambert and Mrs. Mildred Neumann.

Retired teachers will meet again April 1 at 1 p.m. in the Turf Club. Mrs. Margaret Stroud and Mrs. Ellen Swisher will be in charge of the program. "Counting Our Pennies."

Drugs, sex and murder

LONDON (UPI) — Police held 14 persons Monday in another of those macabre murder cases in which the British seem to specialize. Involved so far are the bodies of two men, both found in bizarre circumstances, the corpses of three German shepherd dogs, tales of drugs and wild nude orgies and perhaps more bodies to come.

"We now have two bodies, and there are four men we want to trace but can't find," a Scotland Yard officer said. "A picture of a drugs and sex link is gradually building up. The possibility of more bodies being found is highly likely."

The case began three months ago with the discovery of the mutilated corpse of Edward Chapman, 36, found dead in his blood-filled bath. He had been slashed repeatedly with razor blades and stabbed.

Chapman was known as a "fence" and petty criminal, and a quantity of drugs was found in his house. Police were told he had a reputation for holding wild orgies with nude people dancing on the lawn of his isolated country cottage.

Police set out to find Ricky Montague, 30, a suspect in the murder. They found him last week when a policeman forced open a car's trunk in "a routine search."

Montague was inside the trunk. He had been garrotted and his body wrapped in a blanket. Apparently the car had been driven around for two months with Montague's body in the trunk.

At his south London home police found the corpse of a German shepherd dog, severely mutilated, in the drain at the end of his garden.

"Police said they were connecting it with the deaths of two other dogs, and with the murders," said Mrs. Susan Ovenden, a neighbor. Scotland Yard sources said detectives believe the killings were linked to a drug ring in south London. The theory is that Montague was killed because he knew too much about Chapman's drug connections.

They feared others, particularly the four men they are seeking, may be in danger or dead already. Police planned to start digging up Montague's garden, where the dead dog was found.

French link broken anew

PARIS (UPI) — French police with the cooperation of U.S. authorities have cut off a new attempt to reestablish the "French connection" in drug trafficking to the United States, police said today.

Police said the gang was uncovered when police at Charles de Gaulle airport spotted Olivier Muller, 32, of Le Havre, with Franco Catino, 37, an American sought by U.S. police as a drug trafficker and alleged Mafia member.

The pair left a package to be shipped to the United States. Customs officials opened it and found 200 grams of pure heroin hidden in a frame around a mirror.

The French and agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration tracked down Muller in Le Havre and detained him and his alleged boss, Antoine Gallani, 66, arrested years ago in France as one of the "French Connection" leaders. Also detained was Patrice Lumeux, 25.

Police said that in the group's Le Havre hideout they found picture frames and antique furniture tricked up as hiding places for heroin. They also discovered another 22 pounds of pure heroin.

The drug agents then detained the alleged furnisher of the drugs, Jean Forgemol, 43, an Asian of French nationality, who arrived in Paris the end of February, allegedly with 500 grams of heroin which he left in a baggage checkroom at the North railway station.

The "French Connection" was dismantled in the early 1970s after a vigorous campaign by French and American drug agents to uncover processing laboratories in Marseille for unrefined heroin coming from Turkey.

Europeans, especially those from the vicinity of the Alps, continue to dominate worldwide Alpine skiing competition.

Gaillard named Coach of Year, ex-CSI mentor Sutton third

Spinks wants All's crown

LIVERPOOL, England (UPI) — Six months ago, in Montreal, Leon Spinks of St. Louis was crowned Olympic light-heavyweight boxing champion. Two pro fights later and 20 pounds heavier, Spinks is talking about the world title.

Listening to Spinks is like hearing an echo from the past as he plots the same route taken by the then Cassius Clay who made a similar prediction after his Olympic success 17 years ago.

But Spinks is hoping to go one up on All. He plans a family double, winning the heavyweight crown on the same night his brother Mike, the Olympic middleweight gold medalist, becomes the light-heavyweight champion.

Spinks, 23, who knocked out Britain's Peter Freeman in the first round in the main supporting bout March 5 when light heavyweight champ John Conteh stopped Len Hutchins of Detroit, says he had a constant struggle to make the weight in his amateur days.

"I feel much better now I have put on those extra 15 to 20 pounds," he adds.

Spinks is still on the right side for most heavyweights, coming in at 200. "But they can't hit what they can't see. I like to fight and run at the same time," he says.

His pro career started well when he stopped Lightning Bob Smith in five rounds in New York last year. "I struck Lightning in the same place twice," said Spinks, twisting the old adage.

Spinks would not single out his heavyweight favorite, "I admit all heavyweights who try to make the grade," he said. "You can say I have just graduated from High School and I won't be satisfied until I wear the crown."

Promoter Bob Arum said his ambition was, to see both brothers in the ring on the same night fighting for the world title. He predicted it would come to pass within two years.

"They were the first brothers ever to win Olympic titles together and they could be the first to win world titles also," Arum said. Leon Spinks added:

"Yes, that's our goal — to be the best in the world. We are now entering the second phase of our fighting career and if we get through that we are on top of the world."

from Day One" today for his selection as the United Press International's college basketball coach of the year.

"I'm very honored and taken by surprise," said Gaillard when informed by telephone from New York that he had been voted the honor. "I really hadn't given it much thought. I've been too preoccupied with winning basketball games."

A 36-year-old native of Richmond, Calif., Gaillard received 59 votes in balloting by sports writers and sportscasters around the country.

Gene Barlow of UCLA was second with 18 votes followed by Eddie Sutton of Arkansas with 16. Carl Tate of Wake Forest with 13 and Joe Hall of Kentucky with eight.

"The overall organization was responsible for our success," said Gaillard, who led the Dons to 23 victories and only one loss. "The attitude of the staff and the players from Day

One was the key to the season. "If there were pivotal games, I'd say they were our victories over Utah and Tennessee (in the Utah Classic) and St. John's (in the Rainbow Classic)," he continued. "We have a young team with three sophomores and those victories gave the fellows confidence."

Gaillard became coach of San Francisco when the Dons had an 8-4 record in 1970-71 and led them to a 10-12 finish. His teams have won 132 games and lost 38 in six complete seasons for a 77.5 percentage. The teams won four WCAC titles in five years, won a berth in the National Invitation Tournament—in 1975-76 and, of course, are strongly in the running for the national championship this season.

Gaillard, who also serves as San Francisco's athletic director, took his team on a European tour last summer.

The Dons won six games in Spain and lost three games, to the Soviet Union, Italy and Canada, in the Italian Federation Basketball Tournament.

As a player at San Francisco, Gaillard was twice an All-West Coast Athletic Conference guard.

Gaillard, who presents a young hip image, staged major recruiting coups two years ago when he collected the signatures of Bill Cartwright, James Hardy and Winford Boyes on San Francisco letters of intent.

US skiers play underdog role

By JEFF BIER

Times-News Writer
SUN VALLEY — If the United States had been famed on skis rather than on horses, the U.S. Ski Team might be a power today in international Alpine skiing.

As it stands now, the U.S. must be content to play the dark horse role in the thoroughbred world of Alpine skiing competition.

The people who share the European Alps, the Austrians, Swiss, French and Italians, dominate the sport and will probably continue to be the "kings of the mountain" for the foreseeable future.

America has the mountains to match the Alps. We have the snow.

What we don't have is the all-consuming desire to be the best skiers in the world.

Our individual racers have the pride and the desire to win, but as a nation, we just don't seem to care as much as the Europeans whether we are the world's finest skiers.

The peoples of the Alps live skiing. Skiing is an integral part of the national character in Alpine Europe. An Austrian hero would, very likely, ski to the rescue through the raging blizzard.

Americans play at skiing. Skiing is essentially a recreational activity for Americans. It is something you can do to have fun in the mountains in the winter time. And the mountains in America are not in our own backyards, but one to four hours driving time away.

In America, heroes ride horses, not skis. But skiers are national heroes in Alpine Europe.

In America, the economic rewards for a successful skiing career are every bit as high as in Europe, but the fame and prestige are not equivalent.

When a European stands at the starting gate at the top of a slalom or a downhill, he knows the eyes and hopes of his entire country will follow him down the course. He is urged to ever greater risks and speeds by his sense of personal pride and responsibility to his countrymen.

It can be argued that economic incentives are the motivating factor behind the Europeans' success.

Skiing is one of the major industries in Alpine Europe. It's not just pride, it's bread and butter.

But before Austria and France were building skis for the American market and before American tourists began to visit the Alps as regularly as the winter snows, skiing was an essential part of life in the Alps.

The U.S. will continue to produce great skiers like the Mahre brothers, Greg Jones, Billy Kidd and Jimmy Heuga.

But we won't consistently outski the Europeans until skiing becomes something we can dedicate ourselves to.

House sports panel killed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Select Committee on Professional Sports is dead — a victim of other committees eager to protect their "turf," according to Rep. Frank Horton, R-N.

"The sad thing is that a complex public problem was pushed aside in the headlong rush to defend 'turf' and to place a victim of other committees' power ahead of substance," said Horton, the ranking GOP member on the sports committee.

The committee, created in May, 1976, held numerous hearings into many areas of pro sports and presented its recommendations to Congress in January. They included one suggesting that baseball—the only sport with an antitrust exemption—be stripped of it.

Horton hoped the baseball matter will still be considered by the House.

Long Beach State will run on ISU

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — After a three-year absence, an old name is back in the NCAA basketball playoffs.

Long Beach State, 22-6, will face Big Sky champion Idaho State, 23-4, in a first-round playoff game at Pocatello, Idaho, Saturday.

Ferry Tarkenton put the shivers on the college basketball map and then departed suddenly, after the 1972-73 season.

Almost as suddenly, the school was put on NCAA probation because of recruiting violations in basketball and football. The 49ers, finally, came off the probation in January.

"Long Beach State is back where it should be — in the NCAA playoffs," declared 49ers' head coach Dwight Jones, a former Tarkenton assistant.

"This is really the first chance for the players here to get some recognition."

"Our kids are super excited about going. It's been our goal all year long. A lot of people haven't given this team the credit it deserves. We're a top 20 caliber team and we deserve to be nationally ranked."

Long Beach State will be playing at Pocatello after winning its eighth straight Pacific Coast Athletic Association title and capturing the conference tournament.

The 49ers beat Fullerton State 65-64 in overtime in the semifinals Saturday night and knocked off San Jose State 76-63 in the finals Sunday.

"We've been playing well for several weeks," Jones went on. "Our last four games have been outstanding. We beat Hawaii by 31, Fresno State by 39 and then played two emotional games in our tournament."

"What concerns me most about our tournament is the fact that someone like UCLA has to play only one game at Pocatello and they make it to the next round at Provo, Utah.

"We had to win our conference, and then play two tough games in our own tournament. Now we have to win at Pocatello to get to Provo. I don't know if that's going to affect us."

Long Beach State will be making its fifth appearance in the NCAA basketball playoffs. Jones, 33, was a Tarkenton assistant in two of them.

In Idaho State, the 49ers will face a team with a 7-foot center, Steve Hayes, and a 6-10 forward, Greg Cook. According to Jones, his team will have to be nullify its size disadvantage. Long Beach State's center is 6-8 Clarence Rusden, a finesse player.

"We'll try to make up for our shortcomings with our quickness," Jones noted. "We're just going to try to run and wear the rubber off their shoes."

Large steelhead run expected this spring

SALMON — The sun's path across the sky shifts slowly northward, the days lengthen, ice jams break up, the waters warm, and the spring steelhead find their way slowly up the rivers, toward their spawning grounds.

This spring's steelhead fishing on the Salmon River below the mouth of the Pahsimeroi River could be the best. In many years, according to Mel Reingold, Fish and Game Department fisheries biologist here.

Reingold is optimistic because there's a double run of steelhead returning to their spawning grounds this year.

The run is composed of a strain of one-ocean fish (fish that return to spawn after one year at sea) native to the Clearwater River, steelhead and transplanted to the Pahsimeroi.

The fishing downstream from the mouth of the Pahsimeroi could be unusually productive and, since the Clearwater strain generally produces fish larger than the average Idaho steelhead, there could be some monsters heading for the Pahsimeroi.

Reingold mixed in a little doubt with his rosy predictions, however.

Normally the Pahsimeroi run would have reached the upper Salmon by this time of year, Reingold said, but this year the Clearwater strain is still strung out clear down to the Snake.

Reingold could not give any reason why the fish are still so far down the river, but he remained optimistic about the fishing prospects.

The fishing should get hot as soon as the ice breaks up, he predicts. The ice on the Salmon is usually gone by the third week of February, Reingold said, but this year has been unusually cold.

Reingold said when the ice breaks up it disturbs the river bottom considerably and makes the water rally for about one week after the ice jams start to unlock.

After that the water returns to its usual clarity.

This spring the water should be clearer than usual, Reingold said, because of a lower than usual runoff due to the lack of snowpack.

This can't help but improve the fishing.

However, if the ice doesn't break up soon, the season may end before optimum conditions are reached.

The season on the Salmon River from the mouth of the Middle Fork of the Salmon upstream to approximately 100 yards above the mouth of the Pahsimeroi River closes March 31.

MV lifters score

Magie Valley weightlifters, Gerald Engelbert, LeRoy May and Ron Axtman competed in the Intermountain Powerlifting Championships at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, Feb. 26, with successful record breaking attempts.

Each of the muscular trio powered his way to a second place finish in his individual weight class.

Engelbert, first-heavyweight (260 lbs), lifted a tremendous 565 pounds to topple the old record, set in 1974, by holsting 590 pounds. The deadlift is performed by lifting a loaded bar off of the floor and standing erect while holding the weight.

The other lifts completed were the squat and the bench press. Axtman, a second-heavyweight (242 lbs), lifted 590 in the deadlift, 525 in the squat and 375 in the bench press for a 1490 total and a second place medal. Engelbert lifted 500 in the squat and 340 in the bench press to give him a 1325 total for second in his class. May lifted a 425 squat and a 325 bench press to give him a 1275 total and a silver medal.

The squat is performed by squatting from a standing position with a loaded bar on the back of the shoulders to a full squat position and then standing erect again.

The bench press is performed by lying on a bench and taking a loaded bar at arms length in a vertical position and lowering it to the chest and then raising it to arms length.

The highest poundage lifted in three attempts at each event is added to reach the lifter's total and determine his place in the competition.

Engelbert is serving with the Ketchum city police department, May is employed as a truck driver with a local firm, and Axtman is currently working as a city policeman in Twin Falls.

SV, Elkhorn begin cutting back operations

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Resort and mountain operations at Sun Valley and Elkhorn are being cut back this week to wind down a disappointing winter season.

With the Harriman World Cup Races completed Sunday and the season mostly finished, resort officials say they will begin reducing maintenance staffs and resort operations.

The snow-making machines on the lower Warm Springs face of Baldy Mountain were turned off this weekend, according to Wally Huffman, Sun Valley vice president of recreation and mountain operations. The last snow was made Saturday night before the final world cup races Sunday, Huffman said.

"I think we're through making snow," Huffman stated Monday. "And the reason is this — we've got enough snow built up to last us through the next three weeks until we get more snow."

Temperature ranges in the past few days have been marginal to allow snow making, according to Huffman. Also, Sun Valley projects only about 600 people will now ski daily on Baldy's slopes, a drop from earlier season counts of about 1,000 people daily, Huffman stated. It just didn't make financial sense to continue the snow making, he said.

Sun Valley President Bill Janas confirmed the decision to stop the snow making and reduce operations Monday.

"There's no sense in making snow up there when there are only 700 people on the mountain," Janas said. "Snow making is not for average day use. In the future (this season) there will be no more snow making. It's a case of economics."

Janas said it cost about $1,000 a day to run the snow-making equipment.

Both lifts on Baldy Mountain will continue daily and mountain grooming crews will work over the slopes regularly, according to Huffman. Local events such as Nastar Races and an Auto Tschudi Race Clinic are scheduled for the coming days.

The Sun Valley Inn has been temporarily closed, according to resort officials. It will be reopened when there are more snow and people, officials say.

Sun Valley is now paying a staff of about 300 people, according to Chuck Webb, Sun Valley personnel director. He expects the payroll will probably decrease another 50 people by the end of the week. During the peak of the winter season, Sun Valley employs about 1,200 people in mountain and resort operations.

The cutbacks in winding down for the season are also occurring this week at Elkhorn.

"We will be cutting back on staff but basically on facilities," Elkhorn General Manager Ron Chandler said. The hotel will remain open but the saloon and the Village Cafe have closed, according to Chandler. The Fondue Stube now serves breakfast, lunch and dinner.

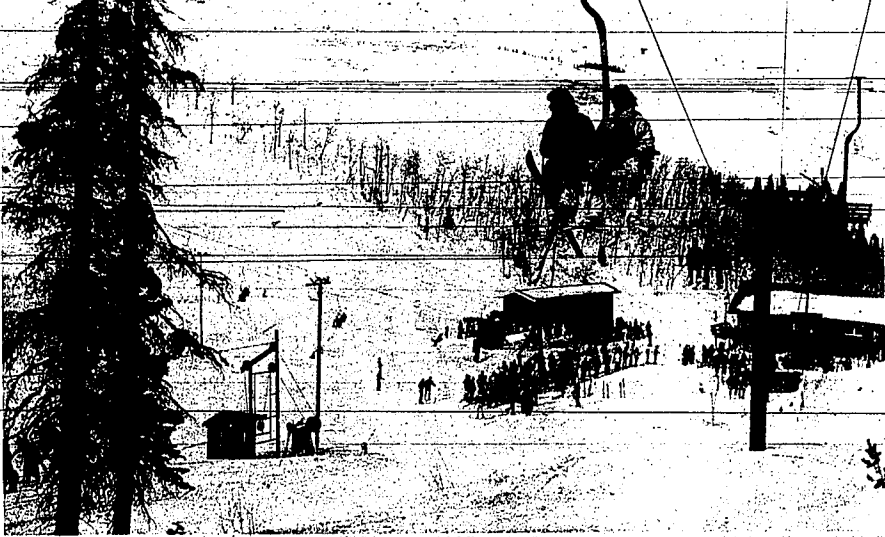

Elkhorn will try to cut back to a working staff of about 20 people, Chandler said. During peak season, about 150 people are employed to run the hotel and condominium operations.

"Basically, it will continue to slack," Chandler said about the reductions. "We will close down the Fondue Stube during the hard slack. We will have some groups tentatively booked."

"We'll probably close down (Dollar Mountain) some time this week if there's no more snow," Huffman said.

Several storms are moving into the area today and tomorrow, according to Butch Harper, snow ranger with the U.S. Forest Service in Ketchum. But no great snow accumulations are expected, Harper said.

Pomerelle records

RECORD numbers of skiers flocked to the slopes of Pomerelle over the weekend. Resort Owner Woody Anderson said there were about 1,200 skiers on the mountain Saturday and about 1,300 Sunday, new records for the area. Pomerelle is the only Magic Valley resort operating with an abundant supply of natural snow. Anderson said night skiing is also attracting sizeable crowds with week days resulting in larger crowds at night than during the daytime.

Water pooling idea down drain

By SHANE O'NEILL
Times-News writer

IDAHO FALLS — Snake River irrigation districts have quietly dropped a federal suggestion that water be shared on a needs basis rather than according to historical water right priority.

Delivery of water to irrigators in Water Master District 1 this season will be handled in the same way it has been for the last 50 years.

The current drought was the major topic of discussion at Monday's district meeting of irrigators here.

Last month, the Bureau of Reclamation asked irrigation districts to consider sharing water in a pooling arrangement to combat the drought. On Feb. 15, Robert Pittard, chief of the water operation and maintenance division of the bureau's Minidoka Project, said that the state Dept. of Water Resources was also proposing a pooling plan.

However, water users did not tackle the question of sharing water for irrigation Monday, apparently satisfied to follow legal water right priorities.

Minidoka Project Supt. Carlos Randolph said today. "The water supply will be handled and distributed as it has in the past in accordance with the priorities of natural flow rights and storage rights."

Randolph said a water rental committee will handle a water pool developed on a voluntary basis.

"The entities in need of additional water will be able to lease space on a limited basis," Randolph said, "and there'll be one price of 50 cents per acre foot for rental water."

Jack Wilson of the Soil Conservation Service told the group, which Randolph called "one of the largest in attendance of any in recent years," that the upper Snake River plain water forecast may be the best in the northwest.

However, Wilson said the runoff prediction for the upper Snake, on the average, is only 32 percent of normal. Based on the SCSS March 1 survey, taken during the past week's snows, some areas showed improvement over a month earlier, but the main portion had deteriorated.

Rod Vissla, regional director for the Bureau of Reclamation, announced that irrigation districts, canal companies and other beneficial water projects can now obtain emergency funding under the drought situation for construction or improvement of water facilities. The emergency funds would be in the form of no-interest federal loans.

Randolph voiced less concern about a water shortage this summer than he did for the 1976 irrigation season.

"By trading labor for water and using good conservation practice, the impact of the drought should be minimal in the upper Snake River Basin this year," Randolph said.

He warned, "The year 1977 is the one everyone is concerned about at this time. Continuation of the drought another year could be critical."

Idaho Gov. John Evans' task force on drought was present at the meeting throughout the day.

TWIN FALLS — A decision could be made tonight on the controversial rescheduling of one of Twin Falls' junior high schools to give it the same number of class periods as the other.

Acting School Supt. Carl Snow said this morning the class period question is on the agenda for tonight's meeting which begins at 8 p.m. Snow added he wasn't sure a decision on the rescheduling would be made by the board, but he said it could come.

The question before the board is whether to cut O'Leary Junior High back to a six-period schedule or to expand Robert Stuart Junior High to a seven-period schedule.

The O'Leary faculty and some parents have opposed a cutback at that school because they believe students should have the extra elective to broaden their educational experience.

Stuart Principal Jack Watts and another group of parents have opposed an expansion of Stuart to seven periods because they argue the district could save money by going to a six-period schedule and because the expansion of Stuart's schedule would require a rezoning to shift some Stuart students to O'Leary.

Watts has said he would rather wait for a rezoning until the new junior high school is completed next year. If a rezoning is done now, he maintained, a second would be necessary after the new school is built.

Snow, who favors the seven-period schedule, has argued one rezoning now could take care of any rezoning needed with the new school.

Parents have responded on both sides of the issue, but all seem to agree what is most needed is to get both schools on the same schedule so students are entering high school with the same course background.

"The curriculum ought to be the same in both junior highs," said Gordon Beckstead, spokesman for an informal group favoring the seven-period schedule. "I think if the district can afford a seven-period day... then I think that's the way we ought to go."

Mrs. LaVar Steele, a second advocate of the seven-period schedule, also said her primary concern is that both schools are on the same schedule.

"I hate to see them both go to six periods," she added, "because I'm not sure a step backwards is what we want, is it?"

Pauline Meyerhoeffer, who leans toward a rezoning after completion of the new school, said what she most wants is more information.

"I think we need to be more informed before the decision is made, and that's all I'm interested in... I would be opposed to anything, until we had some reasons and facts to substantiate what's being done."

Ballet tonight

TWIN FALLS — National Folk Ballet of Yugoslavia, under the artistic direction of Branko Markovitch, will perform tonight at 8 p.m. in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Center.

Community Center Association is sponsoring the 45-member troupe and admission will be by membership only. This is the ballet's first tour of the United States. The artists have been acclaimed at many international festivals and they have received gold medals at the Vienna World Festival, the Moscow World Festival and the International Fair in Damascus.

The artists will perform ethnically inspired dance compositions representing the cultural heritage of six republics of Yugoslavia.

Planning opinion sought

TWIN FALLS — Members of the Twin Falls County Property Owners group have asked the Idaho attorney general's office for an official opinion on two points in the Idaho Planning Act which they hope will delay on adoption of a comprehensive plan.

Nine members of the organization met in Boise Monday afternoon with Atty. Gen. Wayne C. Smith and his assistants. The delegation requested an opinion within three weeks if possible on the question of whether or not a board of county commissioners must appoint a planning and zoning commission or can retain the power themselves.

The second point is whether or not Twin Falls County could be zoned as a "multi-purpose" county under the planning act, and thereby delay action on adopting the presently proposed county comprehensive plan.

Carmen Truscott, member of the property owners group, said her organization is not opposing planning, but rather opposes the present county Joint Planning Commission's proposal.

"We want a plan for Twin Falls County that is workable for everyone, not the present proposal which we feel is simply a list of restrictions," Mrs. Truscott said.

She said her group is asking the county to delay action on the proposed comprehensive plan in order to consider alternative plans based on zoning and planning systems employed elsewhere in the nation.

One in particular, she said, is the Houston, Tex., plan which establishes protective covenants on the land at the time it is sold. Through planning of utilities, major highways and natural land use, she said, Houston is able to guide the commercial, business, agricultural and other areas into a compatible natural growth.

In Boise Monday, the Twin Falls delegates also met with a number of legislators regarding the state planning act. In a meeting with the House Resource and Conservation Committee, delegates were able to get a proposed change in the State Planning Act approved and to the floor of the house. This measure would change the wording of the bill from "shall" to "may," removing the mandatory factory which requires all counties to prepare and implement a comprehensive plan by the beginning of 1978.

Meeting with the Twin Falls County property owners group were T.W. Stevens and Noy Brackett and Ralph Olmstead. Also, Twin Falls County: Gordon Hollifield, Jerome, John Brooks, Gooding, and Gary Inghram, Coeur d'Alene.

Members of the Twin Falls group will meet Friday in Boise at the Roadway Inn with property owners from several other areas of the state to finalize plans for forming a state wide organization.

'Drive-in' decision postponed again

By BOB ZUCKERMAN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council Monday night again postponed a decision on a request by McDonald's-Hamburgers to add a drive-in window to the eatery.

The postponement followed heated comments by McDonald's neighbors who charged the addition of a drive-in window and proposed expansion of the fast-food operation, 305 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., would increase traffic problems in front of the restaurant.

Technically, the several councilmen attempted to suspend the rules governing council meetings and bring the matter to a head. But the council voted 4-2 to suspend the rules, effectively stopping the attempt.

To suspend the rules at least five members of the council must vote yes.

Shortly afterwards, councilmen again voted, 4-2 this time to put the McDonald's request on first reading as is allowed by rules governing council meetings. Because a majority of council members present voted for this action, it was approved.

By putting the request on first reading, the council effectively delayed any action until the next council meeting in two weeks.

During debate, four neighbors of McDonald's listed several reasons why they were against the expansion.

Dr. C.R. McWilliams, 335 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., reiterated an earlier charge that when McDonald's was first built, owners told the council they would not make their "restaurant" a "drive-in."

A. Norman Thomas, 290 Lincoln St., complained of the "high incidents of traffic accidents in the area already." He said the proposed expansion and drive-in window would only aggravate the traffic problem.

Ruth Stevens, 845 Heyburn Ave., who lives directly behind the restaurant, called McDonald's proposed expansion "ridiculous."

Betty Hawkins, 291 Lincoln St., complained of the high number of McDonald's customers and employees who were parking their cars in front of her home. "It looks like a used car lot all the time," she said. "Unless I have the kids that park there, I can't ever park in front of the house."

Russell Kvanvig, attorney representing McDonald's, argued the proposed expansion and addition of a drive-in window would not be denied except for the same reasons, he said. But the council could place conditions on the request, he added.

Before voting, the council placed several restrictions on the drive-in window request: Architectural plans for the expansion and drive-in window must be approved by the city engineer. Reflectors must be placed on outdoor lighting at McDonald's to keep the light from shining into area homes. All employees of McDonald's must be ordered to park in the McDonald's lot. And McDonald's must pull the front of their property back 10 feet, allowing road widening.

At the end of the meeting, the council voted 4-2 to postpone the decision until the next meeting in two weeks.

Three face drug charges

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls man and two Washington residents were arrested on drug charges here Monday as the result of an effort headed by the Twin Falls Sheriff's office with assistance from the city police and state Bureau of Narcotics officers.

Deputy Sheriff Buddy Dewese said Barry Joe Jacobson, 25, and Billy Ray Lowry, 25, both Longview, Wash., and Jay Dee Glancy, 25, Twin Falls, were in custody today in lieu of $15,000 bond each. They are expected to appear in Magistrate court later today on charges of possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver.

Dewese said all three were arrested at the Glancy home, 161 Jackson St., after officers obtained a search warrant and entered the building. Officers confiscated four pounds of what they believe to be psilocybin mushrooms, which contain a hallucinogenic substance.

Dewese said the drug has a street value of about $15 an ounce.

TF center plans OK'd

Twin Falls City Council has approved the plan to build a new community center on the site of the old high school building. The new center will be a two-story building with a total area of 10,000 square feet. It will include a gymnasium, a kitchen, a dining hall, and a lounge. The center will be used for a variety of community activities, including sports, social events, and meetings. The council also approved the plan to build a new parking lot for the center. The new center is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Mrs. Nelson said she hopes the new center will place the community on a more solid financial basis. She said the center will be a "multi-purpose" building that will serve the needs of the entire community. She also said she was pleased that the council had approved the plan to build the new center. Drought affects 24 states

DENVER (UPI)—Powered by hurricane-force winds, the dust storms came out of the northwest, two miles high and chocolate brown, ripping wheat from farmlands furrows and whipping wire fences across country roads throughout the drought-stricken high plains.

Yasbel Oresco's mail truck was blown into a ditch outside Garden City, Kan., and he had to call on his citizen's band radio for help. Juana Elring held onto a rope to find her way from her eastern Colorado farmhouse to her barn.

"I've never seen a wind like that," said extension agent Clyde Richardson at Cheyenne Wells, Colo. "There were fences across roads. It was dark. It never lightened up. There were tumbleweeds piled up 15 feet on the courthouse lawn."

The dust storms, pushed by winds reaching 100 miles per hour, were a frightening reminder of the 1930s. They were caused by a 24-state drought extending from the Great Lakes south to Oklahoma and west through the cowboy states and the nation's breadbasket to the shores of California.

The drought has dried up 160 of Minnesota's 15,000 lakes and 1,000 hand-dug wells as well as western reservoirs. Ski resorts in the Rockies have closed for lack of snow and states have hired cloud seeders to augment the mountain snowpack. In Seattle, a city superintendent urged families shiver together to save water.

Summer blackouts are expected in California when demands for water to cool homes and irrigate crops exceed supplies. The drought has killed livestock on the Navajo Indian reservation in Arizona, Utah and New Mexico.

In the Oklahoma Panhandle, farmer Joe Morris dug holes for fence posts four feet deep into his sandlike soil and said there was no subsoil moisture.

"It's about as dry right now as it was during the 1930s," Morris reported.

Gov. Richard Lamm of Colorado, in recommendations go ways to save water, suggested housewives wash dishes in used bath water. At Altamont, Kan., city officials estimated water supplies would run out in 60 days without rain.

Drought losses in Colorado by Jan. 1 were $86 million.

Minidoka spraying planned

RUPERT — Peach and apricot trees could destroy potato crops in the Magic Valley, Minidoka County's agricultural extension agent warned Thursday.

Hank McNeel urged everyone in the county to notify him of the location of every peach and apricot tree.

"Speaking of peach trees," Chamber of Commerce.

McNeel warned that 8-10 percent of the potato crop in the western part of the Magic Valley was infected with a disease called the potato leaf roller virus.

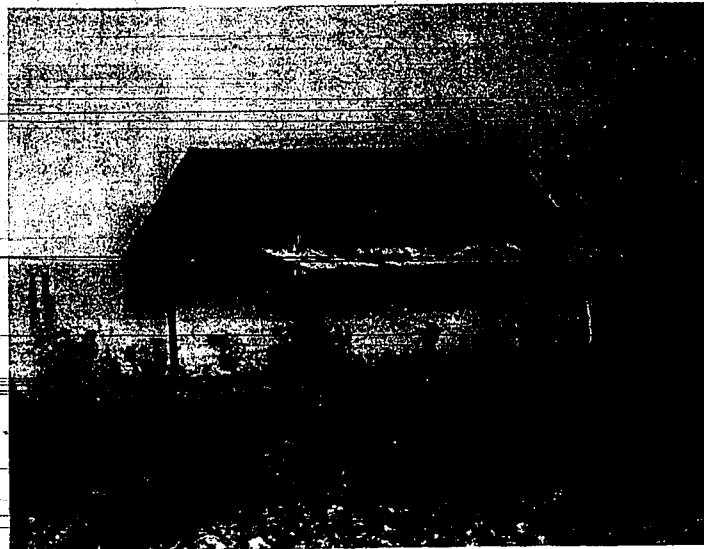

"It's said the virus is carried by the green peach aphid, which is found primarily on peach and apricot trees."

McNeel said the Burley-Ruperta area has had little problem with the virus thus far, but the Twin Falls area and land west toward Wendell suffered considerable crop damage last year.

The county agent, who took over chores here in November, asked that people tell him the location of all peach and apricot trees so he can have them sprayed if the vector aphid threatens in this area.

McNeel also warned that home garden plants can carry the aphids. He urged gardeners to inspect such plants as green peppers, tomatoes and petunias carefully for aphids and insects before buying them.

State inspectors will be checking bedding plants offered by dealers too, McNeel said. He said any found carrying the aphids must be pulled off the market, he warned that any found on a second inspection will be destroyed on the site.

'Dusters' return

According to Agriculture Commissioner J. Evan Gooding, President Carter has declared a drought emergency in some states and, at the urging of western governors, set up a special drought council to aid affected states.

The drought as yet is not as bad as the 1930s, when bankrupt farmers drove tractors to fence lines and walked away in disgust, according to officials. But crop experts say the problem could explode into crisis proportions by summer if the west remains dry.

"Without moisture, there is going to be quite a disaster," said wheat farmer Art Fritton, 69, of Cheyenne Wells, who survived Depression dust bowl days. "The country looks terrible right now. There are dust piles all over."

Climatologists blamed the drought on Pacific fronts which this winter acted as a barrier and shunted snowstorms into Canada, bypassing the west, before they dipped into the Ohio Valley and blanketed eastern states.

Three storms broke the barrier within the last 10 days and triggered snows in the Rockies. The snowfall brought some relief to ski area operators who have lost millions this year but smothered drought-dry farmers in southeastern Colorado.

The American National Cattlemen's Association predicts stockmen, panicked by predictions of poor summer range, may sell cattle early and take a financial loss. Farm officials say supermarket prices could jump if crops fail and growers go bankrupt.

At Norden, Calif., this week's Sierra snowpack was 28 inches compared to an average of 90 inches. Oregon Gov. Bob Straub said his state needed "one and one-half feet of snow every day for the next 40 days to bring mountain snowpack to normal."

"We get more phone calls per day on the drought than anything else," said Missouri Agriculture Director Jack Runyan. Everybody's out of water. One farmer called and wanted to know why I couldn't make it rain.

Agriculture Secretary William Dultman of Kansas, where moisture levels are far below average, says much of the state's 13 million acres of planted wheat could be lost if dust storms recur.

In Colorado, the wheat harvest may drop 60 per cent in drought counties.

"You can't make it rain and you can't keep the winds from coming up," said Dultman. "But the good Lord could sure turn this thing around for us by sending rain and keeping the winds down."

Utah milk production climbs

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI)—The Utah Crop and Livestock Reporting service says the state's dairy herds produced more milk in January, 1977, compared to the same month in the previous year, resulting in a higher output of cheese.

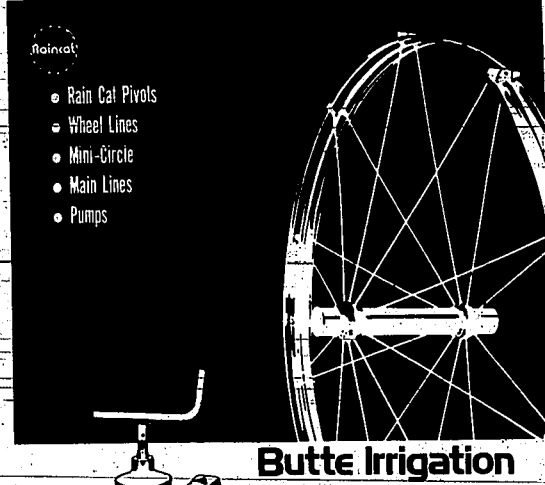

but less cottage cheese and ice cream.

The state agency said Utah's milk production for the month totaled 76.4 million pounds, up from 74 million pounds in January, 1976. And most of the milk—71.3 million pounds—was used directly in dairy plants.

The remaining 5.1 million pounds was sold to consumers or other institutions, or was used on farms.

Cheese production total 5.65 million gallons, up from 4.65 million gallons for January.

The opposite side of the earth has high tide when we do, and low tide when we do, too. So where does all the water go at low tide if not to the opposite side of the earth? It piles up in between on both sides of the earth, that's where. And when we have high tide, both sides of the earth between us and the opposite side have low tide. Got that? Read it back.

Romanian earthquake leaves 80,000 homeless

Pulled from rubble

Two women, who were pulled from the rubble of their collapsed building Saturday, rest in their hospital beds in Bucharest, Romania, Monday following the devastating earthquake that flattened their home Friday. As the U.S. and other western nations marshaled aid to Romania Monday, unofficial estimates put the death toll at 4,000. (UPI photo)

BUCHAREST, Romania (UPI) — This was a capital of two faces today, one badly scarred and the other without blemish. The Friday earthquake struck in a checkerboard pattern of horror. There was no widespread leveling of buildings, as happens in saturation bombings. The city center, the oldest part of town where the damage was most concentrated, looked as if it had been hit by small missiles, each one finding a separate building as its target. They left islands of ruin in a sea of upright 6-to-12-story apartment buildings. The authorities said 32 buildings had been knocked down but only a handful collapsed from the shock of the rumbling quake. A common denominator in Bucharest is the shocked disbelief of the city's 1.7 million residents that an earthquake of such magnitude could strike Bucharest. More grief will come when the dust literally settles after the removal of the debris and the homeless — unofficially estimated at more than 80,000 throughout the devastated region — find that they cannot go home again because the buildings are unsafe. What characterized the effects of the quake more than anything in this flat city of wide boulevards is the pinpoint precision with which some buildings crumbled in dust although adjacent ones remained standing intact, wounded sentinels with bricks and plaster at their feet. The Intercontinental Hotel, its interior cracked, lowered 23 stories above the debris around it. A 10-story building across the street had its front wall shake loose, exposing pastel-colored rooms reduced to three walls. A block away, another six-story apartment building adjacent to the American Library fell in a heap of debris to its foundation. The library was virtually untouched. Yet another block away another building had crumbled to dust, plaster and bricks. An estimated 20,000 apartments in the city alone were destroyed or uninhabitable. Municipal inspectors already have marked some for demolition and perhaps hundreds of other buildings are on the waiting list for inspection. It will mean a housing shortage unprecedented since wartime but the problem is compounded because there already was a housing shortage, a common feature of eastern-European life. Young families share apartments — sometimes only two rooms — with their parents because there is nowhere else to move. Now, tens of thousands of persons have been displaced — more than 12,000 officially — and are being put up temporarily in schools, school dormitories and apartment blocks recently built but unfinished. Some homeless are sleeping in parks. "It's lucky that the weather had been mild and I don't know what's going to happen to these people if it suddenly turns cold, which happens here," one American said. "There's no heat and, of course, there's no heating in the new buildings where some of the homeless are being relocated."

"There are so many people in the streets that if there is another tremor more people would die than in the earthquake because they would panic and trample each other," said Olivia Marinescu, 29. The hospitals were full and more injured, dead and dying were brought in from the rubble 72 hours after the quake. Manuela Carmen Nicolaidis, 32, was in serious condition with two broken legs and facial cuts, her eyes blackened by a blow to the head.

Pope Paul to name first US male saint

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI plans to proclaim two new saints, one of them an American, and two "blesseds" this year, Vatican sources said today. They said John Nepomucene Neumann, a 19th-century emigrant to the United States in 1836 and became known for his work among immigrants and in the parochial school system. He died in 1860 and Pope Paul proclaimed him a bishop of Philadelphia in a beatification ceremony Oct. 13, 1963. The year's other canonization will be that of Charbel Makhlouf, a Lebanese hermit who died on Christmas day in 1898 and was beatified in 1965.
